General Moseley Arrives in Atlanta In Fighting Mood

Refuses To Reveal Plans Regarding Dies Probe, But Is Expected to Remain Here Several Days.

Major General Van Horn Moseley, central figure in the latest Dies committee investigation of un-American activities came into Atlanta shortly before 1 o'clock this morning in a fighting mood. He had arrived from San Diego, Cal.

Erect, of military bearing, the retired general said succinctly to a Constitution reporter as he strode with precision through the Terminal station: "I don't believe in talking before the battle."

The general, for whom a subpoena has been issued by the congressional committee investigating un-American activities, was referring to his scheduled appearance in Washington within the next few days.

Natily Dressed.

Wearing a straw hat, light suit, with red tie and red handkerchief modishly hanging from his breast pocket, General Moseley was inclined to wave aside insistence that the story, from a national viewpoint, required comment.

He referred questioners to his brief declaration at El Centro, Cal., in which was said he had learned for the first time that he was regarded as a Fascist.

(In El Centro, Cal., Moseley said in a statement Saturday that "all I am doing is to continue to follow those patriotic Christian, American principles which have governed me for a lifetime in serving the Republic of the United States, particularly during this period of emergency, in assisting as far as I am able in my subordinate position, in saving America from herself.")

"That's all I can say," he repeated several times as he walked through the station. "The statement at El Centro is all I do for publication before I report to Mr. Dies."

Refuses Company.

He refused offers of reporters to ride him to his hotel.

"No, that's very nice, but you mustn't do that!"

To protests from reporters that

Forgotten Key Causes

Upward in Neighborhood
NEWARK, N. J., May 23.—(AP)—Vincent Pallitto forgot his apartment key.

Not wishing to disturb his wife, he climbed out a hall window and attempted to reach his apartment via the roof.

The roof was slippery—and pitched. Pallitto slid groundward until he reached a friendly chimney which prevented his falling three stories. He couldn't climb back.

Neighbors called police, mistaking him for a burglar. An emergency squad finally removed him from his perch on the chimney.

Mrs. Pallitto woke up and let him in.

Lad Playing Hide and Seek Sticks in Pipe

Jimmy Flynn's Shouts for Help Bring Neighbors to Rescue.

The kids around Rawson street were playing hide and seek last night in the yard of the Formwalt Street school. The general idea of which, of course, was to disappear from the view of other participants.

So 10-year old Jimmy Flynn took what he considered a good way out. He hopped down a hole leading to a 25-foot long storm drain pipe. The pipe runs down an embankment and comes out on Eugenia street, which was Jimmy's destination.

Jimmy, who had made the dark journey through the pipe many times before anticipated no obstacles. But about a foot from the opening, his legs struck a piece of cement. Trying to push past this

PAY-HOUR HEARING FOR TEXTILES SET HERE FOR JUNE 26

Leaders of Industry and Union Agents Will Discuss Committee Recommendation of 32 Cents.

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.
WASHINGTON, May 23.—After receiving recommendations from a committee named to suggest a minimum wage for the textile industry, Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews announced late today a public hearing had been scheduled in Atlanta June 26 to consider the committee findings.

Leaders in the textile industry generally, employing 650,000 persons in manufacturing cotton, silk, rayon and other textiles, are expected to attend the hearings, with representatives of the labor unions involved. An earlier preliminary hearing for the same purpose will be held in Washington June 19.

32½ Cents an Hour.

The textile committee, known as Industry Committee No. 1 under the fair labor standards act of 1938, presented a formal recommendation for a minimum wage of 32 1/2 cents per hour, Administrator Andrews revealed.

The majority report, signed by Donald M. Nelson, chairman, and 13 committeemen, asked that any wage order resulting from its recommendations be made effective July 1, 1939. Officials estimated that the number of textile workers whose wages would be increased by such a wage order would be about 175,000, many of them in the south. Of those affected some 125,000 are cotton textile workers.

Minority Report.

A minority report, signed by six members, also was forwarded to Mr. Andrews. This dissented from the recommendation of the majority as one which would result in "substantial curtailment of employment" and asked that it be disapproved.

Today's was the first authorized revelation of how the committee had voted. The members signing the majority report (32 1/2 cents an hour), in addition to the chairman, were: Fred Lazarus Jr., of New York, president of Business Publishers' International Corporation.

SENATORS VOTE RAIL RATE PLAN

Modified Substitute Added to Wheeler-Truman Transportation Measure

WASHINGTON, May 23.—(AP)—The senate approved today a plan looking to adjustment of railroad freight rates which southern and western legislators have termed "discriminatory."

A modified rate plan, offered recently as a substitute for legislation seeking flat equalization of rail charges throughout the country, was written into the Wheeler-Truman transportation bill.

Southern and western interests have complained for years that the existing rate structure gave unfair advantage to northeastern or "official" freight territory.

As amended, the Wheeler-Truman bill, which comes up for a senate vote tomorrow, includes a ban on unlawful discriminations in freight rates and calls upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate charges on manufactured articles with a view to eliminating such discriminations.

This amendment was introduced by Senator Hill, Democrat, Alabama, and Representative Ramspeck, Democrat, Georgia, when earlier attempts at rate legislation drew criticism. Hearings were held on both sides of Capitol Hill.

The modified plan was approved by the senate today without objection.

FIGHTING HEART ADVANCES YATES TO THIRD ROUND

Struggling against the greatest scoring spree of the British amateur golf championship tournament and a set of wooden clubs that just wouldn't function right, Atlanta's Charlie Yates, defending champion, finally defeated the Scottish internationalist, Donald Cameron, 2 and 1, at Hoylake, England, to advance into the third round tomorrow.

It took a fighting heart to win as Cameron played sensational golf and Yates' wooden clubs acted stubbornly, but Charlie came through, playing nine holes that deserve to be remembered in that historic club with the feats of Old John Ball, Bobby Jones and Walter Hagen. Tomorrow Yates meets Dick Chapman, of Greenwich, Connecticut.

Sh-h-h, But 'Nazis' in Atlanta Prove Just Beer Drinkers

Evolution of Rumor Stating German-American Band Organized in City Traced by Writer and Found Untrue; Club Members Meet Only To Have Fun.

By LAMAR Q. BALL.
If one of your bookish friends slips up furtively and whispers, "Don't look now, but the Nazis are organized right here in Atlanta," here's the way it all started:

An Atlanta minister of Irish extraction—the Rev. James W. Kennedy, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Epiphany—decided that the time had come for him to review Adolf Hitler's "Mein Kampf" at those semi-monthly book reviews he offers in the Sunday school auditorium.

He notified his secretary, who issued the invitations, attended to the posting of the placards and spread the news by word of mouth. Mr. Kennedy then went to one of the downtown stores and bought one of the more widely-credited translations of Der Fuehrer's thoughts while in prison. He took it home, struggled through its bleak pages and wished that the thought had never occurred to him. It was too late then to do anything about it. The audience had been notified and he had to keep his promise. He winced as he read the book two, three and four times to be sure he had missed nothing and made a mental note that he must guard himself in the future against these impulsive notions that serve only to make the life of the impulsive clergyman more difficult than the average.

Monday night, May 15, the Rev. Mr. Kennedy stepped forward on the platform on the basement floor of his church at 502 Seminole avenue, glanced apologetically at his audience and confessed:

"I'm sorry I attempted this. This is one of the most difficult reading jobs I have ever assigned to myself."

Then he swung into an hour or so discussion of "Mein Kampf," warning his audience as he moved along that he was not discussing the merits of Hitler's political philosophy but was confining himself merely to a discussion of the literary merits of a book that had

GEORGIA PATROL GIVEN TWO BOATS

Government Officers Craft to Wild Life Group.

Director Joe D. Mitchell, of the state division of wild life, announced yesterday the federal government had offered Georgia two boats for use in the division's coastal patrol.

Mitchell said that during a recent trip to Washington Representatives Ben Gibbs, of Jesup; Hugh Peterson, of Ailey, and Carl Vinson, of Milledgeville, joined him in a request for federal boats for enforcement in law enforcement. The congressman telegraphed him yesterday the boats were available.

The boats are 36-foot, 115-horsepower craft, now held in Illinois and Virginia.

The wild life division patrols the coastal region enforcing fishing laws.

JUDGE HUTCHESON PAID FINAL TRIBUTE

Services Held at Jonesboro for Former Georgia Supreme Court Justice.

Final tribute was paid yesterday to Judge John Bell Hutcheson, retired justice of the Georgia supreme court, who died Sunday at his home in Jonesboro.

Services were conducted at the Jonesboro Baptist church by the Rev. Blake Craft and the Rev. Claude Hendrix and burial was in the Jonesboro cemetery under direction of H. M. Patterson & Son. An honorary escort was formed of representatives of the Stone Mountain circuit and the Atlanta Bar Association. Scores of state and county officials were in attendance.

The Stone Mountain circuit, over which Judge Hutcheson formerly presided, adjourned for the day and the capital offices were closed during the afternoon by order of Governor Rivers.

Ramsey Urges Extra Session

G. E. A. Secretary Lists 3 Reasons for Meeting in June; Recommends 3 Per Cent Sales Tax.

By The Associated Press. Executive Secretary Ralph L. Ramsey, of the Georgia Education Association, who also is director of the Better Education for Georgia Movement, listed three reasons yesterday for a June legislative session as:

First—To make a deficiency appropriation to pay Georgia's $1,000 teachers an estimated $5,200,000 in delinquent salaries.

Second—To permit reopening of closed schools for completion of curtailed terms during the summer months.

Third—To let local school systems know what fiscal demands are to be made upon them for 1939-40 to supplement state school support.

Ramsey said he was confident Georgia's legislators would reconvene, either of their own accord or by call of Governor Rivers, "to work out a sound and permanent program" for support of Georgia's schools.

Urges Sales Tax. He estimated a 3 per cent sales tax, earmarked exclusively for support of Georgia's common schools, would adequately care for education "without need for biennial lobbying" by school leaders.

At the same time, he added, such a move would release approximately $5,000,000 from the general fund for additional support of eleemosynary institutions and old-age pensions.

He has directed two surveys of legislative opinion, including query whether members of the assembly are ready for an extra session to consider school financing and arranged compilation and distribution of 50,000 pamphlets with a fiscal survey by a special fact-finding committee.

TRI-POWER ACCORD BELIEVED REACHED

Russia, France Reportedly Wins Over Halifax to Moscow Viewpoint.

GENEVA, May 23.—(P)—Representatives of the British, French and Soviet Russian governments were believed to have reached agreement on the principle of a three-power union to counter-balance the Rome-Berlin axis.

Viscount Halifax, the British foreign secretary, was understood to have been won over to a closer form of mutual aid among Britain, France and Russia than his government previously had favored.

Lord Halifax was understood to have been persuaded by Russia's refusal, as conveyed by Ambassador Ivan Maisky, to consider anything essentially less than comprehensive mutual assistance.

NAZIS IN ATLANTA? JUST IDLE RUMOR

netted its author millions of dollars on a world market. The very fact that made the book so dreary to him—bore some repetition—was the very quality Hitler purposely had developed as the necessary virtue of a successful demagogue.

"Hitler knows the public mind," says Mr. Kennedy. "He fights as every successful leader must fight, without emotionism. That's Hitler's technique; a cold and calculated play on what he knows is a public weakness and reiteration and re-emphasis to arouse that weakness into an action he can convert to his own uses."

He drove these points into the minds of the audience as he moved along and when he wound up, a bit laudatory of the Hitler craftsmanship, he thanked his audience and stepped down off the stage.

beside him. "The Nazis are here," he was warned. "They've been sitting in the last row, making notes of everything you said. They made their notes in German. They're going to send them to Der Fuehrer."

"The Nazis Are Here." The cry ran 'round Atlanta, gathering momentum every day. "The Nazis are here. They're getting their lists ready for 'Der Tag.' When they take us over, they'll know just whose head deserves the block."

As the rumors increased, the name of H. F. Linder, the manufacturing jeweler of Plaza way, appeared as head of Atlanta's German-American bund. The story had it that Linder, himself, appeared at the discussion of "Mein Kampf" to insure accuracy in the report that would be forwarded to Herr Hitler.

Yesterday, Linder looked up from his bench in the jewelry factor, he has made famous in Atlanta.

"Ah, you have heard of the bund?" he commented, smiling amiably. "It is getting so I can

PSYCHOPATHIC UNIT AT GRADY INDORSED

Planning Council Urges State, Counties To Co-operate in Probe of Insane.

Co-operation of the counties and state in investigating cases of patients to be returned by the state hospital at Milledgeville was requested yesterday by the Social Planning Council of Atlanta, which also indorsed the proposal to establish a psychopathic ward at Grady hospital for the city and Fulton county.

Commending the county commissioners for their efforts to have psychiatrist and physicians deal with the mental patients to be returned, the council, which is made up of welfare workers, recommended that the state hospital determine to whom the patient should go before returning him.

"It further seems to us that the county has the right to expect that the institution assume the responsibility of determining first to whom the patient is to go or give the county time to investigate whether families, relatives or guardians are in position to provide for such discharged patients," the council's statement, released by Miss Rhoda Kaufman, executive secretary, said.

The council asked if it would not be a "policy of wisdom" for the state hospital to employ properly trained workers to investigate the homes, environment and so forth of each patient to be returned.

The proposal for the city and county to maintain a psychopathic ward at Grady was highly commended but the council warned that such a ward should be used only for examination and observation of patients pending commitment and not for long-term custodial care.

SPELLMAN SEATED AS N. Y. ARCHBISHOP

Former Grocery Boy Becomes Spiritual Leader of 1,000,000 Catholics.

NEW YORK, May 23.—(P)—In a setting that looked at times like a majestic, ecclesiastical painting, the Most Rev. Francis J. Spellman was enthroned today as the sixth archbishop of the Roman Catholic archdiocese of New York.

The sanctuary of stately old St. Patrick's cathedral on Fifth avenue glowed with the pontifical red of prelates' vestments during the solemn ceremonies that made a former Whitman, Mass., grocery delivery boy, now 50, spiritual leader of 1,000,000 Catholics.

go nowhere without this talk." Then Linder explained: "Yes, I was at the book review—Mrs. Linder and I and one of the boys who work in my shop, Bernhard Gerhardt. Naturally, we were interested in the book review. I didn't take a note. Gerhardt took notes and why he took them is simple to explain. The Reverend Mr. Kennedy is Irish. I judge from his name. He was having a terrific struggle with those German words as he went along. For instance, he translated the word 'nachtergreifung' as 'grab.' That was bad. 'Nachtergreifung' means the grasping of power when a political party is successful. It is not right to dismiss it merely as 'grab.' The Reverend Mr. Kennedy's translation of several German words caused us to what you call shudder. Mr. Gerhardt made notes of the more serious errors, hoping that at the end of the lecture there would be a discussion and we would have an opportunity to discuss these errors. But, at the end of the lecture, he stepped away and no one had a chance to say anything. Gerhardt took his notes home and threw them away."

"That's how the Nazi bund started in Atlanta. People see something happening and they leap to conclusions. The conclusions are always wrong."

German-American Club. He picked up a ticket from a packet on his desk. "Read there!" he commanded. The ticket was for admission to a Dutch supper and dance to be given by the German-American Club of Atlanta in its headquarters, 80 Fourteenth street, Saturday, June 3.

"On the back!" he emphasized. Across the back of the ticket is printed: IMPORTANT PARAGRAPH FROM OUR CHARTER.

THE GERMAN-AMERICAN CLUB is STRICTLY non-political, non-sectarian. The club was founded nine years ago by German-Americans for the purpose of furthering German art, literature, music, singing, study of the German language, and old-fashioned sociability.

H. F. LINDER, Pres. The German-American Club, Linder explained, is a revival of the old turnverein, the folksfest, where those who like to sing German songs and drink beer gather to do just that.

"I have never heard Hitler's name mentioned where German-Americans are gathered to drink beer and sing," said Linder. Mr. Kennedy was told of Linder's explanation.

"I am glad it all had such a happy ending," he commented. So clip this out and hand it to those who whisper: "The Nazis are organizing right here in Atlanta."

After all, if it had been Irish words that Hitler had been trying to translate, he would have had a time.

HAWAIIAN DEFENSES WILL BE TESTED TODAY

HONOLULU, May 23.—(P)—One of the nation's swiftest and most formidable fighting units—20,000 troops of the Hawaiian department—will begin a three-day "battle" tomorrow to defend this island (Oahu) against a theoretical enemy whose power and approach are presumed equivalent to wartime.

Operating under simulated warfare conditions in annual maneuvers, highly mobile troops will maintain an elastic steel band around the jagged coastline of this "frontier" island against "enemy" warships, transports and aircraft.

"Everybody thought I'd be a failure"

(BUT I FOOLED THEM BY MAKING A REAL SUCCESS)

I WAS SHOCKED TO DISCOVER WHY PEOPLE WERE AVOIDING ME. I HAD "B.O."

BUT I FOOLED THEM! I STARTED BATHING DAILY WITH LIFEBOUY—SAID GOODBYE TO "B.O." AND MADE A BIG SUCCESS!

Who, ME?.. Guilty of "B.O."?

YOU may think this message is not for you. But the dangerous thing about "B.O." is that offenders rarely know when they are guilty, but other people notice it immediately. That's why every time two people meet, may be a critical moment for both of them. A bad impression is a lasting impression. To be guilty of "B.O." in business or social life, is to do yourself a great injustice—and perhaps great harm.

So why take chances? Why not play safe? Use Lifebuoy in your daily bath! It contains an exclusive ingredient not found in any other popular toilet soap. Lifebuoy in your daily bath stops "B.O."—assures personal freshness. Try Lifebuoy! You'll enjoy its rich, lively, penetrating lather.

7,000 Facing Tax Penalties

Tardy Must File Returns Immediately To Avoid Loss and To Save Their Homestead Exemptions.

Seven thousand Fulton county taxpayers face penalties, among them are 2,100 home owners who will lose their $2,000 annual homestead exemptions, if they do not file their 1939 returns immediately, Guy Moore, Fulton county tax receiver, warned yesterday.

Moore issued his warning "to save homestead exemptions for those entitled to them and to prevent penalties from being assessed against the thousands of others, who have so far neglected to file their returns for the current year."

"There has existed and still obtains a popular idea that once a person has claimed his homestead exemption, it remains in force for all time," Moore said. "That is a fallacy. The law specifically sets out that the exemption must be claimed each year. That is for the purpose of ascertaining that the real home owner still occupies and owns the house on which the exemption was first claimed.

"Thus the state law allowing the homestead and personal property exemptions—both are in the same category—was very definite, and no matter whether our office knows that the home is still occupied by the owner and he is entitled to an exemption, we can not allow it unless he applies annually for his exemption.

"Time for filing has been extended for a few days, and our office is now accepting returns of all kinds without applying the penalties, ranging from 10 per cent of the amount of the tax, plus interest to the full charge, which alone ranges from $1 to $150.

"At this time last year there were about 10,000 delinquents. Today that figure stands at about 17,000—due largely to failure of the citizens to file for their exemptions.

"The moratorium will not last much longer, and we must begin refusing to receive any exemption applications and also must begin to assess the penalties as provided by law.

"We solicit the co-operation of the public in this important phase of our work for the purpose of saving it actual money. We do not want to be forced to deny exemption to anyone entitled to receive them. Neither is it a pleasant duty to impose a penalty on anyone. We must, however, under the law. We will be forced to begin within the next few days."

TECH ROTC TEACHER GETS NEW COMMAND

Lieut. R. D. Smith Ordered to San Diego on June 28.

Lieutenant Rodman D. Smith, an instructor of the Georgia Tech naval unit, has been ordered to report at San Diego, Cal., on June 28 to command the U. S. S. Waters, it was announced yesterday.

The Waters, a destroyer, is now in Hawaiian waters, but will be based at San Diego at the end of June.

Smith, a native of Quitman, graduated from the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1925, and served for a year aboard the U. S. S. Wyoming. Then followed three years on destroyers in Europe and Nicaragua. After attending the submarine school at New London, Conn., he was with the Asiatic squadron two and a half years.

He has been with the crack Tech unit for the last two years. With his wife and child he makes his home at 818 Clement drive.

F. D. R. HAS HOPES OF CREW'S RESCUE

President Follows Developments; Admiral Leahy Plans All-Night Vigil.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—(P)—President Roosevelt reflected the navy's anxious optimism today in saying he was definitely hopeful that the crew of the sunken submarine Squalus could be saved.

By air and sea, apparatus developed in the last decade was rushed to the spot off the New Hampshire coast where the newest American submarine lay helpless on the ocean floor. The coast guard joined the navy in a dramatic mobilization of forces.

Experts were hopeful that the apparatus could raise the 1,450-ton ship, crew and all, or failing this, that "bells" and "lungs" could bring officers and men safely to the surface. All these devices have been developed since the loss of 40 men aboard the S-4 off Provincetown, Mass., in 1927.

Official optimism was tempered, however, by records showing that never before had the crew been saved from an American submarine lying as deep as 240 feet.

Leahy Keeps Vigil. President Roosevelt, closely following developments by naval radio, told reporters the Squalus commander reported the best chance was an attempt to refloat the submarine by compressed air. The so-called lungs, Mr. Roosevelt said, would be used only as a last resort because it would be safer to bring the whole ship to the surface.

Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of operations, other top officials and submarine experts remaining here, arranged to keep an all-night vigil.

WIFE IS UNAWARE OF MATE'S PLIGHT

En Route To See Sub Crewman After 2 Years.

LEXINGTON, S. C., May 23.—(P)—Unaware that her husband whom she has not seen in nearly two years was trapped at the bottom of the ocean in the submarine Squalus, Mrs. Robert Franklin Gibbs was en route by train tonight to Portsmouth, N. H., to join him.

Visiting her husband's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Gibbs, here since December, 1937, Mrs. Gibbs boarded a train before news of the submarine's plight was received.

A Romanian girl, who married Gibbs in Shanghai, Mrs. Gibbs speaks only broken English and members of the family said they did not believe her knowledge of the language was sufficient for her to understand a telegram. Efforts were being made to get someone who speaks Romanian to board her train at Washington and inform her of the situation.

She preceded her husband to America from China.

Sailor on Squalus Suspected Ill Fate

BOSTON, May 23.—(P)—A sailor's premonition that the trial run of the navy's new submarine Squalus might be ill-fated was revealed tonight by Mrs. Francis J. Murphy, mother of First Class Quartermaster Francis X. Murphy, on the Squalus.

"My boy said the Squalus was stuck for more than an hour while on a week's cruise that ended last Friday," she said.

"Another 50 feet lower and we would have been cooked, Ma," Mrs. Murphy quoted him as saying on a visit home over the week end. "I want you to pray for me while I am on this trip."

"My boy knew something was going to happen."

The child, Geraldine Wilkins, daughter of Mrs. Omie Wilkins, of 627 Simpson street, suffered lacerations and bruises. She was treated at Grady hospital.

59 ENTOMBED IN SUB TAP OUT ASSURANCE

Wandank, anchored above the sunken underwater craft, Captain Greenlee quoted Naquin as saying, just before telephone communications with the Squalus were broken, that he had tried without success to communicate with the stern compartments. He reasoned Naquin would not have made this move if all of the 59 aboard were safe in the forward compartments.

Captain Greenlee said also that the listening device on the surface had heard faint tapings in Morse code from the sunken craft, but that the sounds had been so faint that only letters and no words could be distinguished.

Lieutenant Naquin, speaking shortly after noon on a telephone line sent up from the Squalus by buoy, recommended to his superiors that a immediate effort be made to bring the trapped men to the surface individually by means of the new escape "lungs."

Naquin's Recommendation. The best course, he suggested, would be for a diver to come down from the surface and attempt to close the open air induction valve. An air hose then could be attached and the flooded compartments pumped out.

Soon after the Squalus' commander gave this advice the telephone connection broke.

At sunset this evening, Lieutenant Commander Charles B. Momsen, inventor of the escape "lung," the best of his name, gathered at the scene with eight expert navy divers who were flown up from Washington to see if a descent was possible before the arrival of the Falcon.

Thirteen other diving experts were flown from Washington to Newport, R. I., where they picked up diving equipment and then drove to Portsmouth by automobile. The crack diving crews were equipped with helium, now used with oxygen in deep sea descents.

Must Locate Squalus. No immediate diving operations were possible, however, due to the necessity of definitely locating the Squalus again after the breaking of the line first sent up from the sunken craft.

Due to the test nature of the cruise on which the Squalus met her accident three men were on board in addition to the five regular officers and 51 crew members. Two were civilian employees of the Navy Department and one was a contractor's representative.

Two Ships Over Squalus. As dusk fell, tonight, two ships were anchored over the sunken craft—a submarine sister ship, the Sculpin, and the navy tug Wandank.

Between the two floated a yellow buoy, the sole bit of visual evidence of the sunken craft and its crew. It had been sent up by the Squalus—one of the dozens of new safety devices carried by the navy's newest submarine—and had let off a smoke bomb and later provided telephone communication. Not far from the Sculpin and the Wandank were the coast guard boats Harriet E. Lane and Thetis and a 75-foot patrol boat, while converging on the scene were the cruiser Brooklyn, the destroyer Semmes, the tug Iwana and the all-important Falcon.

Bringing Diving Bell. Aboard the Falcon was all of the navy's latest rescue equipment, including a diving bell that could be let down to the sunken ship to bring up three or four men at a time.

The Squalus lay on the ocean floor for hours this morning before its plight was discovered. The submarine went down in a routine dive at 8:40 a. m., but failed to come up after an hour—the usual trial dive limit.

Approximately three hours later a red smoke bomb signal bobbed to the ocean surface some six miles off the Isles of Shoals—a signal that a submarine was in distress.

Whole Aft Flooded. The sister ship Sculpin sighted the bobbing "bomb." Telephone contact was established between the two "tin fish," a brief story was given of an induction valve left open during a deep dive, coupled with a report that the crew's quarters, aft engine room and aft torpedo room—the whole aft section—were flooded.

ODD FELLOWS NAME BRIDGEWATER HEAD

Atlantan Elected Grand Patriarch at Encampment in Savannah.

SAVANNAH, Ga., May 23.—(P)—H. J. Bridgewater, of Atlanta, was elected grand patriarch of the grand encampment, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, here today. Bridgewater succeeds W. B. Walker, of Atlanta. Election of officers occurred at the business session of the grand encampment which with the Rebekah assembly, opened a three-day convention here this morning.

Other officers elected were: Clyde L. Saye, of Athens, grand high priest; Fletcher W. Lair, of Atlanta, grand senior warden; A. B. Snell, of Columbus, grand junior warden; C. B. Guest, of Athens, grand marshal, and T. W. Brown Sr., of Atlanta, grand inside sentinel. The grand outside sentinel has not yet been selected.

Officers re-elected were: D. L. Nichols, of Atlanta, grand scribe; J. F. Goodwin, of Atlanta, grand treasurer, and W. B. Walker, of Atlanta, grand representative. Reports from the grand scribe and grand representative indicated a very successful year.

disaster—another undersea accident not many miles removed from the spot off Provincetown where the submarine S-4 went down in 1927 with the loss of 40 lives—the office of Admiral C. W. Cole, commandant of the Portsmouth navy yard, issued the following statement:

"I think they have a pretty good chance. We don't know just how much water got in but the ship is capable of being shut off in four or five water-tight compartments and it is possible, with oxygen tanks on board, for them to keep going for a week."

Officers here said the men on board had an emergency supply of oxygen that would last 48 hours after all other aid had been exhausted.

Lates Safety Devices. So new was the Squalus (it was commissioned on March 1, 1939) that every known and proved safety device was incorporated in the powerful craft. It had four escape hatches, some of which could be used for a dual purpose.

From all of them, men could escape on at a time, wearing the Momsen "lung." Some trepidation was felt by navy officials here about the use of the "lung" from a depth of 240 feet, and Lieutenant Naquin, in his brief message from the ocean floor, suggested this be held as a last resort. Lieutenant Commander Charles B. Momsen, who developed the "lung," flew in from Washington late today to give on-the-spot advice.

Lieutenant Naquin felt that if a diver could be sent down it would be a comparatively simple matter to attach a hose to an air valve and force the water from the after part of the ship, allowing it to rise, in his own word, "normally."

Eight Each Trip.

Still another avenue of escape was offered by the slow-moving rescue ship Falcon. It carried the newest of diving bells—a submarine escape bell which could be fitted over one of the escape or other hatches, allowing men to step directly from the air of the submarine to the air of the bell. In an emergency as many as eight men could be placed in the bell at one time.

Navy officials, discounting the difficulties of working in 240 feet of water—said diving equipment generally had been developed far beyond that available in 1927 when trained divers repeatedly suffered severe attacks of the "bends" (air bubbles forced into the blood stream) when working in 140 feet of water in a vain effort to rescue the men on the S-4. A synthetic breathing mixture of helium and oxygen has been developed that has allowed a diver to descend more than 400 feet off the New England coast.

Easier to Reach.

Officials argued also that the valves on the Squalus would be easier for a diver to reach than were those on the S-4. Due in part to a rough sea that made diving difficult, those trapped on the S-4 never were given air, nor could divers reach a valve through which water could be pumped out.

The Squalus is 290 feet long, with a beam of 26 feet, and is rated in size at 1,450 tons. Launched last September 15, the craft has been on routine operations in this area preparatory to formal trials at sea on June 13. This accounted for the outside observers who were on board, boosting the size of the usual crew.

Pin Ball Game Fan Evades Jury Duty

LOS ANGELES, May 23.—(P)—Mrs. Estelle Herrel, a housewife, was summoned for jury duty in the case of a druggist charged with operation and possession of a nickel-in-the-slot device that sometimes pays off with prizes.

Asked if she believed she could serve impartially, she replied: "Judge, I just love to play those machines myself."

The court excused her and commended her on her candor.

CAFE MAN INDICTED ON PIN-BALL CHARGE

Operator of Restaurant Near School Named in Grand Jury Bill.

Trouble continued yesterday to dog the steps of T. A. Farr, operator of a small restaurant across from Commercial High school on Pryor street.

Haled before the police committee once by school officials in an effort to revoke his business and beer licenses, Farr yesterday was indicted by the grand jury on a misdemeanor charge of "keeping and maintaining a scheme and device for the hazarding of money," in this case named as a pin-ball machine.

A half a dozen students at Commercial were among the witnesses called by the grand jury in hearing testimony on the bill of indictment.

Farr defended himself before the police committee several months ago with the assertion that he ran a "clean place," did not sell beer to minors and did not encourage school students to "cut school" to loiter in his restaurant. The committeemen did not revoke his licenses, as was requested by school officials, but warned Farr to prevent the schoolboys and girls from hanging around his place during school hours.

T. H. Smith, special investigator for the police department, prepared the case against Farr.

Arnall States Procedure in State Violations.

Attorney General Ellis Arnall ruled yesterday violators of state traffic laws must not be tried in recorder's courts, if those courts are in counties having a county or city court.

He advised Commissioner Phil Brewster, of the Department of Public Safety, such violations could not be heard in the recorder's court of Macon, since Macon had a city court.

Recorder George M. Nottingham, of Macon, had written Brewster inquiring about jurisdiction of his court in violations of state traffic laws.

mer Wallis Simpson, she still couldn't remember.

Lady Lindsay earlier had named the official groups invited, such as foreign affairs and foreign relations committees, standing committee chairmen, and majority and minority leaders of the house and senate.

Some senate wives thought the entire senate, as the treaty-making body, should have been invited. Some representatives' wives felt Lady Lindsay should have chosen congressmen instead of "searching social registers" for representative Americans.

Invited Average Americans. Lady Lindsay said that by representative Americans she meant average Americans. Each American, in her opinion, represents some group, such as labor, clergy, press, business and the like. Social registers, she said, are average in that particular group.

Declaring she had never confined guest lists to social registers, said she was not doing so now. Widows of former presidents, former ambassadors to Great Britain, army, navy and marine corps leaders were among special groups asked, she said. The King and Queen enjoy Walt Disney's pictures, Lady Lindsay said, but she could not remember offhand whether any prominent stage and screen artists were included.

afternoon in which Her Majesty's car was overturned.

"Though the bruising is considerable and will need some days' complete rest, Her Majesty's general condition is this evening satisfactory."

"Signed, Stanley Hewett and Dawson of Penn."

The signatures were those of Sir Stanley Hewett and Lord Dawson of Penn. The latter attended King George V and is probably England's most noted physician.

News Given to King. News of the accident was given to King George and Queen Elizabeth as their train pulled out of the tiny coaling station of Jackfish, Ontario, on the north shore of Lake Superior.

The royal car, which was returning Queen Mary from Wisley, Surrey, to Marlborough House, was badly damaged when the front of the truck crashed into a rear wheel. No one in the truck was injured.

Lady Constance Milnes-Gaskell, lady in waiting, and Lord Claude Hamilton, comptroller and treasurer in the Queen's household, riding with Queen Mary, suffered minor bruises. Oscar Humphrey, veteran royal family chauffeur, was said to be suffering from shock.

Trapped in the royal limousine, the Queen was helped out by Percy Hullis, a house painter. He said:

Queen Rescued. "On hearing the crash, I rushed to the overturned car and to my surprise I found Queen Mary lying inside, accompanied by a man and woman. I saw they were trapped in the car. Afraid that it might catch fire, I called to one of my men to bring a pair of steps (a ladder). We passed them inside the car."

The lady in waiting (Lady Constance) was pinned in the back by one of the seat cushions and Queen Mary was lying across the feet of the man. When we helped Queen Mary to climb out, she passed some joking remark which I cannot remember. We had to hammer the window to open it to put the steps inside."

The Queen was carried to a near-by house which proved to have been the home of Dr. H. S. Revell, a physician who died last week. Unable to get medical aid there, she sipped a cup of tea and remained 15 minutes while arrangements were made for physicians to attend her at Marlborough House.

CITIES' GROWTH LAID TO FARM PROGRESS

Dean Chapman Points Out Agricultural Efficiency to Kiwanians.

Efficiency of agriculture has made the growth of American cities possible, Dean Paul W. Chapman, of the State College of Agriculture, told members of the Kiwanis Club yesterday.

The statement, the dean thought, was probably surprising to urban dwellers who like to blame the farmers' troubles on his lack of progress.

Production Grins. Illustrating his point, he said 19 farmers, in 1789, produced only enough to feed themselves and one other person, whereas now 19 farmers meet their own needs and those of 68 others. In 1839, it took 46 hours of labor to harvest an acre of wheat. In 1939, it takes half an hour.

Such rapid progress, he said, makes it possible for thousands of young men to leave the farm each year and move to the cities, and partly explains agricultural surpluses, and low prices.

If no such forward strides had been made, he commented, 123 million farmers would be needed to feed seven million city-dwelling Americans. As it is, 32 million farmers feed themselves and 98 million townspeople. Most of the advance, the dean said, was brought about by the use of farm machinery, though Georgians have not taken advantage of machinery as they should.

Serious Problem. The state, he says, faces the most serious problem today it has ever faced, in the choice of a new economy to take the place of the cotton economy.

He suggested increasing the average Georgia farm acreage production of crops that cities must buy, production of industrial raw materials, and co-operation. "We must learn to work together," he concluded. "A small farmer hasn't much chance to earn a decent living without co-operation from his community."

The Same Program

President Roosevelt's speech on Monday night, before the Retailers' National Forum, was a plausible restating of the philosophies of the New Deal, especially in relation to national finance and "spending for recovery."

It was an adroit presentation of a theory of governmental responsibility and governmental activity which should appeal strongly to men whose business success depends upon the consumer purchasing power of their communities.

The great weakness of the argument, from the financial view, is the failure to consider possible depreciation in currency purchasing power. This, in fact, is the fundamental weakness of the entire theory of unrestricted spending and a continuance of the unbalanced national budget, with its corollary of an ever-mounting national debt.

Such circumstances, continued indefinitely, are bound to result in currency inflation and its corresponding drop in the value of the dollar. There was, in fact, a hint in one part of the President's speech that might indicate a contemplation of debt repudiation as the way out. This was when he said that, after all, the national debt is merely a debt from ourselves to ourselves.

The New Deal economists always seem to proceed upon the assumption that the dollar will never change in purchasing power. That it has not already done so, in noticeable degree, as a result of the Presidential reduction in gold content may be attributed, almost entirely, to the great stability of American business.

It will be small comfort to the American worker to know that he is guaranteed, by law, a minimum number of dollars in his wage envelope, if those dollars so shrink in purchasing power they are insufficient to provide the necessities of life.

There is too great a danger to the nation's economic and social security in ever-mounting debt. Even though the tax burden of today seems heavy, it would be far better to increase taxes and balance the budget, than to continue going further and further into debt.

The President, on Monday night, made out a reasonably good case against any drastic reduction in federal expenditures. The answer, if his arguments are accepted, must be greater federal tax revenues or ultimate national bankruptcy, repudiated government obligations and depreciated currency.

Transportation

In a speech before the Western Traffic Association last week, W. J. Williamson, general traffic manager of Sears, Roebuck & Co., pointed out the nation's transportation ills are not confined exclusively to the railroads. "The great need in the transportation industry," he said, "is a voluntary co-operation by all agencies to adjust the conflicting relationships between the several forms of transportation." This, he said, was necessary to obviate eventual control or ownership by the federal government.

Although over one-third of the nation's main line mileage, aggregating 78,000 miles, is in trusteeship, operating under the direction of the courts, a somewhat similar situation applies to other forms of transportation, to water lines, trucks and air lines.

"Over 18,000 truck lines," Mr. Williamson pointed out, "showed an unsatisfactory operation ratio during the first nine months of 1938. We are faced, not with a railroad problem, but a transportation problem, an economic problem affecting the lives of 7,500,000 men, women and children."

Irrespective of needed revisions in law, which should be made at the present session of congress, according to the speaker, "it cannot be justly said that the present plight of transportation was caused entirely by laws and regulations; nor can it be cured merely by changes in laws."

It is equally important that the entire transportation industry develop a leadership which will assure readjustment of the present non-cooperating relationships. "A commissioner of transportation, with powers given voluntarily by the several forms of transportation," Mr. Williamson contended, "should be named at once. Regulations, both federal and state, should be applied as a natural corollary to each form of transport in equal measure."

It cannot be doubted much wasted effort and lost motion exists as a result of lack of co-operation between the several forms of transportation. Yet competition continues, now as always, to be the life of trade. The principle applies with no less force to transportation than to other forms of industry.

The French "Dictatorship"

Last year, after floundering on the road to Utopia behind the popular front banner of M. Leon Blum, the people of France hauled down that emblem of the new freedom and raised the good old tri-color to its accustomed place. Eduard Daladier, regarded as a strong man, was made premier. He was given authority to straighten out the nation's tangled affairs left by the experiments of his predecessor.

It was not long, however, before it was discovered that even a determined man, such as Daladier, would need additional powers if France was to be unified and brought to its full strength in the face of threatened aggression at every frontier. So Daladier was granted dictatorial powers. Many supporters of the Blum government and many commentators abroad predicted the end of democracy in France for many years.

Yet, there has always been considerable doubt as to the soundness of the argument. It should be remembered that Daladier was given powers only for a limited time. That these powers can be withdrawn. That he has no control over the chamber of deputies. That it can vote him out of office at will by refusing a vote of confidence. Only last week the chamber was called upon for such a vote. It was granted, of course, but it wasn't unanimous. It was given by a two-thirds majority.

Although a two-thirds majority is a substantial margin, nevertheless the fact that there was a vote at all, that there was considerable opposition, indicates he still must submit to the will of the people through their elected delegates. To compare this dictatorship with the power of Mussolini or Hitler is pure nonsense. Neither of these is responsible to anybody. Nothing short of a military revolution could oust them against their wills. They retain their power by surrounding themselves with followers who do their bidding without asking questions. If one hesitates out he goes and nobody knows where.

The people of France were quick to see the advantage in unifying their power and resources in the face of danger from abroad. They are no less wary of the danger of losing their freedom.

Royal Liberty

Perhaps it is the salubrious climate, but the King and Queen of England are finding liberties of movement in the western hemisphere that would be impossible in the tight little island of their kingdom.

The best example of this came Sunday when their majesties walked and talked with throngs in the Confederation square of Ottawa, an unheard of liberty for British royalty and for the people over whom they reign. In England, in London, it would have been impossible, both from the standpoint of danger and that of royal position. It just "isn't done."

Another example came when George and Elizabeth granted a press conference, commonplace for public figures in America, yet until recently unheard of even in a spot of empire as far removed from the throne as the British Embassy in Washington. This royal press conference apparently was an effort to allay misunderstandings that have been plaguing certain northern newspapers which, for some unfathomable reason, became upset because a general invitation to the press had not been issued for the garden party at the British Embassy in Washington. At the same time, it displayed intelligence and courtesy on the part of the King and Queen that unhappily has not been matched by a small element in the American press.

Nevertheless, a royal press conference would be unthinkable in London and no doubt the King and Queen enjoyed this, to them, unique experience. Certainly it showed them to the press as the kindly, decent and friendly people they always have been.

No doubt King George and Queen Elizabeth are enjoying their unusual freedom as much as the people who came to pay them homage. At home, they are prisoners to the invisible bars of tradition.

Now that kind words have been spoken for canned corned vittles, imported and domestic, how about three ringing cheers for army salmon—for the laugh?

"Sometimes I think I might as well etoain shridu cwiffp—" from a serial story in the Nevada press. Come, come—you'll hate yourself if you do.

Great Britain is deporting undesirable Nazis by the gross—and what, by the way, are the sidishows doing about capturing a desirable Nazi?

Then there was the fair Philadelphian who spent so much for insurance on her husband she had hardly any money left for arsenic.

Now that Charlie Ross has been identified, how about having him searched for the missing Jefferson nickel?

TEACHERS TALK BACK

(From The Cleveland Plain Dealer.)
The "indictment" which a committee of the Cleveland Teachers' Union draws against the administration of Cleveland schools is somewhat suggestive of what the private soldiers of a military company might say if they were given opportunity to criticize the "skipper" and his lieutenants. It is necessary for a great school system to have a number of superior officers, the same as a business organization needs superintendents and foremen. Often if these officers are worthy of their salt, they will not be popular with some of those over whom they have supervision.

The antagonism between classroom teacher and supervisor is an old feud, as those familiar with education know. It is similar to the internal friction in a commercial establishment between salesmen and credit manager, or production chief and auditor. Often it is a healthy sign, indicating that both groups are on their toes.

There may be some merit in the teachers' protest about the subjects such as music, health and safety education which do not rate the revered title of "major study." Yet such criticism comes with ill grace from those who are, or should be, sincerely devoted to the broad advancement of public education. They seem to put themselves on the side of those outsiders who are continually attacking the cost of education and particularly those parts of it which they ignorantly call "frills."

We believe most enlightened public opinion recognizes the value of these supplements to the three R's. Certainly they have proved their value in this city.

THE CAPITAL PARADE

By JOSEPH ALSOP AND ROBERT KINTNER.

BEST NEUTRALITY BILL WASHINGTON, May 23.—After months of lackadaisical search, the way to revise the neutrality act has apparently been found. It is the bill recently introduced by Senator Guy M. Gillette, of Iowa, which goes to the heart of the matter, removing the embargo on arms exports to belligerents and doing very little else.

The bill not only provides what the State Department ardently desires. It also has at least tentative approval from the department, having been prepared by Senator Gillette after long conference with Secretary of State Cordell Hull, and with the technical assistance of several department officials. The stage for action has been well set, for a companion bill has been introduced in the house by Representative Sol Bloom, also after conference with Secretary Hull. The only trouble is that setting the stage has been delayed until the curtain is almost ready to go down on the congressional session. There may be no time to act, after all.

SHILLY-SHALLYING Such is the fitting climax to the story long ago as the fall, the President, the State Department and most men informed on foreign affairs were unanimous that the arms embargo section must be removed from the neutrality act. The section threatened to withhold vitally necessary help from the democracies in time of war. Its removal was and is the best and safest step open to this country to prevent war, by making the aggressor nations think twice before fighting. Secretary Hull and his aides believe that with the arms embargo repealed, the chance of war in Europe will be reduced by 75 per cent.

Early in the congressional session, a number of bills were introduced amending the neutrality act, of which the only legislative feasible measure was that of the chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, Key Pittman, of Nevada. Unfortunately, the Pittman bill had a fatal defect. It clothed repeal of the arms embargo in the so-called cash-and-carry plan, requiring nations buying war supplies in this country to pay for them and take them away. Cash-and-carry would have been advantageous to the democracies in Europe, but it would also have been advantageous to Japan. Senator Pittman, who had introduced his bill, as it now seems, without consulting the State Department, sought to remedy the defect by offering an amendment virtually excluding Japan from his bill.

The improvement might have met the case if the Japanese had not been hovering on the verge of active military alliance with the Fascist axis. Only last week, German pressure on Japan to join the axis reached a new high. The State Department feared that passage of the Pittman bill as amended, being obviously hostile to Japan, would drive the Japanese into the axis arms. Thus, the department and the senators shilly-shallied together, not knowing which way to turn.

THE TRAGEDY Secretary Hull himself seems to have solved the problem, if very belatedly. He was a long time in making up his mind, and is understood to have done so about ten days ago, at the time when he called a group of senators to his home and warned them he could not testify on the neutrality act in the so-called cash-and-carry plan. The result of his testimony. At about that time, he was seeing a great many members of the foreign relations committee of the senate and the foreign affairs committee of the house. Both Republicans and Democrats were included in these conferences, at which the secretary emphasized the danger of war abroad, and pointed out the importance of reasonably prompt action on the arms embargo.

The result, in the end, was the Gillette bill. Promises of adherence to the bill are already reported to have come from men as different as Senator Hiram Johnson, of California (one of the bitterest opponents of the Pittman measure); Senator White, of Maine; Senator George, of Georgia, and Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi. A count of the senate committee list reveals that, if Senator Pittman will get behind the measure, and if the President will order his henchmen, Senators Barkley, Green, Pepper, Schweikert and Thomas, to go along, the Gillette bill will have a comfortable majority of 13, and perhaps even 15 out of 23. A careful check indicates that the majority on the senate floor would be in the same commanding proportions, and the house would surely follow along.

If Senator Pittman, Secretary Hull and the President will get together at once, the bill can perhaps be carried even now. But it is so late that the ardent believers in mechanical neutrality may succeed with a filibuster. In fact, aimlessness, indecision and the "let it go till tomorrow" spirit may have cost us a 75 per cent chance of averting a war as disastrous to us as the direct participants. And that is a tragedy, for us and for the world.

Gone

State.

It was during the latter half of last week, Something—haven't the slightest idea what—had gone wrong. A sense of defeat was the strongest emotion in the old chest. Every thought but brought reactions as to the futility of everything. "What's the use?" was rapidly becoming the personal slogan. Didn't seem worth while to keep on trying and the future years of life stretched ahead like a barren desert of waiting, just waiting for the end.

Then, Saturday night, it happened. A simple telephone call did it. Changed the entire aspect of the future and set the personal sun to shining once more. There was again a purpose in life and things looked pretty hunky-dory after all.

The phone call was from Rev. Felton Williams. You know him, or have heard of him, surely. He is the man who has turned over his life to the effort to lift the least privileged of all Atlanta children to a life higher, to give them better health, more happiness and the training that means a chance for worthy and happy lives.

That Camp

For Youngsters.

Dr. Williams operates Mountain View summer camp, for boys and girls. Different from most camps in that it costs the youngsters nothing to spend a glorious week there. You see he takes some 400 from the very poorest sections of Atlanta. Children who are almost always hungry, who know no playground save the streets and alleys, who often have had no moral or religious training whatsoever.

It costs $5 a week to keep a youngster at Mountain View. But the $5 for each youngster comes, somehow, from people who would not feel quite right spending money on their own vacations, while such youngsters had no summer holiday at all. The five-dollar checks and bills come in, somehow. Dr. Williams never worries. He operates on faith and his faith is always answered.

However, this year, it was necessary to build cottages at the Mountain View camp for the accommodation of the children. The old system wouldn't do any more. The buildings were so badly in need of repair the new cottages just had to be built.

This column, by telling the story one day early last week, attempted to solve the problem of those cottages. And Dr. Williams' telephone call of Saturday night was to announce success!

Grand

People.

A couple of grand people—Mr. and Mrs. Virgil P. Warren—came through in the need and gave Dr. Williams a check sufficient to provide all the cottages he needs. In addition they promised to retain their interest in the camp and help, all they can, in the future.

A man and his wife, well known in Atlanta. Touched by the need for these children, those who need such a summer camping trip worse than any others in the city.

It's a grand sort of thing, to find a man and a wife working together like this. Using the gifts that have come to them through life, for the good of others. Realizing that the holding of wealth is, after all, but a temporary stewardship.

The cottages are provided. Now, of course, it is necessary to raise some $2,000 to send the 400 little ones to occupy those cottages, to get at least one week of ample and good food out of the 52, to romp and to play and to have a glorious time in the great outdoors.

Well, just as came the cottages, the $2,000 will be forthcoming. Dr. Williams is sure of that. As stated, he is a man who operates on faith and he always says that faith is one thing which, if you really trust it, will never fail.

And isn't it a gorgeous thing to know, after those dark days of depression, that "Silhouettes" was the means of bringing the need and the ability together for those cottages?

Twenty-Five

Years Ago Today.

From the news columns of Sunday, May 24, 1914:
"It's most scathing denunciation of modern dress of women that has ever been delivered by a preacher was heard last night by hundreds of people at the street meeting conducted by the Baptist religious campaign workers."

And Fifty

Years Ago.

From the news columns of Friday, May 24, 1889:
"Parson McLean, of Montana, being advised by his physician to drink beer, went to a saloon to get it. His church promptly fired him out."

Chicks Swallow Tacks

In Bozeman, Mont., when 17 of Mrs. Lawrence Moore's three weeks' old chicks showed signs of illness and one died she investigated and found a box of roofing tacks were missing.

Putting two and two together, she decided they added up to a case of masindigestion and so she went to work with a razor blade, opening up the crops of the robin-sized chicks.

She took as many as seven tacks from one bird and all had at least one in his crop. The operations were a success; the chicks survived.

FAIR ENOUGH

By WESTBROOK PEGLER.

Up to NEW YORK, May 23.—The limitation of bids to the royal garden party at the British Embassy almost puts it up to the fourth estate to revive the fine old art of gate-crashing, which has become almost extinct in journalism.

This thought probably has occurred to other members of the craft, and it may be taken for granted that efforts already have been made to case the joint and learn who delivers the groceries, meat and bloaters and whether any of these persons would like to lay off and go to the ball game on the day of days. The possibilities are not exhausted by the closing of the guest list and the knowledge that there will be detectives from the federal service as well as Scotland Yard men guarding the portals and pouring grog in the guise of butlers or lushing the same in the guise of deservingly Democrats.

An American fly cop might be willing to tie his shoe while a particular friend passed in, and it was a detective from Scotland Yard, no less, who made it possible for your correspondent and Mr. Floyd Gibbons to crash the gate at the lying in state of the late father of the present King Emperor in London a few years ago and not only made it possible but initiated the idea. You never know until you try, and if you miss the worst that can happen is a quiet heave into the alley. They wouldn't be likely to bend any blackjacks over a man's head in such circumstances, and a lady journalist could give them the old "Sir, how dost you!" and threaten to lie down and scream that they had socked her a couple. They couldn't let that happen.

The True

Crashing Art

But that grocer's boy and butcher's boy business is longshoreman's stuff, and the true art of crashing calls for a dignified and suave correspondent, gate, and that calls for nerve, poise and scenic effect. There was a lady on the News here in New York in the late Phil Payne's day who crashed the reception after a Vanderbilt wedding with her hair whitened up with powder and got away with it by smiling at everybody and pretending to be elderly and deaf. When they stopped her at the door she just smiled and kept on going, and that was all there was to it except that she adopted a trick of walking up to people and saying, "And how is your dear old mother? Please tell her I shall call her up real soon. I am very hard of hearing. I can't hear a word you say."

At Garmisch during the winter Olympics, Paul Gallico crashed a cordon of Hitler's Black Guards by busting through from behind and saying with a stupid grin, "Excuse, please. Ich Amerikanischer not speak German language." They could have thrown him out, but they didn't, and then he was where he wanted to be.

'Old Man' Front is best. If a Worked it man or woman, dressed for the part, crashed right through as though it were insulting not to know him or her by sight there is one terrible second of suspense, and it either works or it doesn't. It works in a surprising percentage of attempts, and a man worked it beautifully once when the examiners were going over the papers of an absconding bank president in Chicago. He just walked in, laid his stick and gloves on the board table and said, "Well, let us proceed to business, gentlemen," and somehow the examiners thought he was the banker's lawyer and the lawyer thought he was an examiner until he got up to catch an edition.

Someone then asked him, "And who are you representing?" "Hearst's Chicago American," my old man said and bowed out.

I would give something to see Herbert Bayard Swope putting the crash at the royal garden party, because Mr. Swope just about took over the peace conference in Paris, and an embassy party would be just a drop-in for him. He might even send downtown for his bags and dig in for a few days, provided he liked the place and the King didn't interrupt him.

I don't know what has happened to the art of crashing. In Louisville I saw old One-Eyed Connelly, who used to clatter around the country with his baggage in a cigar box, and spook and baggy from ridin' the blinds, and he was laundered and pressed now and attended the Derby on a pass instead of crashing. He said he had hit the daily double at a Florida horse yard and was riding in the clubhouse sleeping no more in culverts and flop houses but in regular hotels.

Women Doctors.

Women doctors are ousting men from hospitals, according to Doctor Norman Jennings, Hull, England, coroner.
Two women doctors on the staff of the Children's Hospital, giving evidence at inquests, said there were now three women doctors in places formerly held by men at the hospital.

Dr. Jennings said the explanation was that in an emergency men doctors, particularly those attached to the Territorial Army, would be called up.

Men doctors can get no training today and the best training is being collared by women, he said.

ONE WORD MORE

By RALPH McGILL.

COURAGE, DEMOCRACY, GOOD WILL TO MEN The Rhinehardt College commencement exercises had been called to order and the first number on the program was the salutatorian, a young man named Garrison.

They breed orators in the mountains. A student at Rhinehardt or Young Harris College will debate, and well, at the drop of a hat. In fact, they might find the hat to drop. Anyhow, this young man's knees did not shake. There may have been the merest tremor in his voice. But that was not important. He had something to say. He was talking about courage. Most of the adults there were feeling a bit blue. Some of them thought Roosevelt had been worse than usual in his speech to business. Others were just worried about conditions in general.

Garrison went on and finally, just as everyone was wondering how the sweet girl graduates and the gawky boy graduates are going to get jobs, Garrison said:

"It ought to be easier for us to succeed or to find our place in the world than it was for you, our friends and parents."
He went on in this vein. He had taken courage as his theme. It wasn't a long theme but he made his point. He was representing the male section of his class and it was easy to see they weren't worried about "isms" or all the zanies who are going about yelping that America must be saved. They are going to work, when and if they find a job. And they think they will find one. They will be the first to save us from all the army of those who would save us from their own imaginary fears.

MAKING THE WORLD SAFE Most of us, I guess, have grown cynical about the post-war developments. In fact, you can get a raucous laugh at most any cocktail, tea or garden party by using that old phrase, "Making the world safe for democracy."

Yet a young lady representing the high school class had thought it out. She said, in her talk, that she and her classmates believed it still to be a good idea, this making the world safe for democracy. And why not? She also said that she and her classmates often wondered why nations made war and had discussed it at length. She said they had worked out their idea of what constituted democracy. It was good will toward men, friendliness between peoples, education for all, opportunity for all, and a united effort to make the country a better place for all the people to live. These were some of the ideas of Miss Martha Quinn and her class.

There followed the college valedictorian, Miss Elizabeth Karr. She stood up and, without a note or a tremor, gave one of the best straight-from-the-shoulder talks you would want to hear. It was about what she and her classmates, representing you, believed in. They believed in decency and in democracy, and in the benefits of education. They also believed in the dignity of work and of humanity in general. If Miss Karr ever gets into politics, which she seemed much too nice to do, she would make a fine stump speaker. It was a very fine trio of speakers. The mountain schools produce cheaply orators but thinkers.

I have found this at Social Circle, at Dalton and in other communities where the classes are graduating.

THE PROBLEMS OF ADULTS It is a well-known fact that in one of the writings of Socrates, adjudged a wise man, there may be found a few paragraphs in which Socrates bemoans the fact that the youths of his old age were not nearly so worth while as those of his own youth. They were not respectful and not amenable to discipline. That same charge is made in each generation and it is no truer today than it was 400 years before the birth of Christ when Socrates was making it.

It is my honest opinion the young people of today are better morally, physically and mentally than they ever have been before. Adults can't be any too proud of the job they have done in the world. The World War, in which about 10,000,000 young people died for a principle announced by adults, who had their tongues in their cheeks, hasn't redounded to the credit of the adults who ordered the war or made the peace. The field of politics, be it state or national, doesn't offer the crop of graduates anything to make them cheer their elders.

The greatest crop Georgia has is the crop of graduates. The same statement applies to the nation. We not only can afford to have faith in the new generation, we can't afford not to have that faith.

I'm all for them. They speak well and they think well. They ought to do a better job than their predecessors. I hope so, anyhow.

The Slave Always Has a Job and Security, But the Master's Mules Fare As Well

By ROBERT QUILLEN.

Once upon a time, when the animals could talk, a worker traveling to a fruit farm where the crop was almost ripe and stopped to ask the owner for a job.

The owner hired him at a fair wage and showed him a little cabin where he could sleep and cook his meals, and he worked there for several months.

When the last crops were gathered, the worker realized that his job would soon be gone and began to worry, for the weather would soon be cold and he had no place to go.

One evening he saw the owner's mule eating from a stack of hay and said to him: "You are luckier than I. The owner feeds and shelters you when he has no work for you, but he feels no responsibility for me. I will be turned out in the cold to starve."

"I belong to him," replied the mule, "and a man of good sense takes care of his property. You are your own master."

"Small profit in that," growled the worker, and forthwith he resolved to make himself secure against want, for it seemed shameful that a man should envy a mule.

At the big house he said to the owner: "Look here; it isn't right to feed and shelter your mule during the winter and turn me out in the cold. I am worth as much as your mule."

"Quite true," said the owner, "but you are a free man, while the mule belongs to me. I own him."

"Well," said the worker, "I understand you paid three hundred dollars for the mule, and for that price I will sell myself to you and become your property."

So it was agreed, and the worker signed a paper and received three hundred silver dollars, which he buried in the ground for safety. Thus the worker sold his birthright for the usual pottage and became a piece of property.

THIS MORNING

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES II.

"God save our gracious king!
Long live our noble king!
God save the king!"

The lines are printed here with intent to be as irritating as possible to those who find them irritating. Irritating citizens of our United States who are dull and un-democratic enough to resent the welcome extended by this country to the two nice young people who represent the sovereignty of a great sister country—is a pleasure. This is a time for patriotism and democracy but it is also a time for opposing the many who employ the terms to unpatriotic and undemocratic ends. High in the hierarchy are those who think it as bold to talk against the British today as it was in 1775 or 1812 and who pretend that American democracy is as much affronted by George VI as by George IV.

Salutes to the King and Queen of England as they visit our country are salutes to two very human and presentable symbols of a land which is at least as democratic as our own and to whose history, institutions, laws and letters we owe most of our American inspirations. They are salutes to monarchs who reign but do not rule, who have not a thousandth the power of our own President and who are not more capable of imposing their will upon the British people than are the British flag and the British national anthem and the British lions in Trafalgar Square. It is the salute to the tokens of England, nothing more.

We want no King in this country, but we have often need of some human symbol of the sort to stand for no one party or administration or economic theory but for the country as a whole, for the country's unity, dignity, patriotism, and continuing process. In so far as our President is conductor of the state he needs to be subject to sharp criticism and unabashed examination. But in so far as he is the head of the state it is not good for us or for our country to have him called bad names, made the butt of indecent jokes, treated with aggressive disrespect by so many of those who oppose his policies.

Only the hoodlum spirit or the childish intelligence would make the visit of the British King and Queen an occasion for shouting our own democracy against England's. If democracy is a matter of government by the people we might consider that the English people could have turned Neville Chamberlain overnight if they desired but that our people could not be rid of Franklin Roosevelt until 1941 if they tried. And if democracy is a matter of governmental concern for the welfare of the masses, we might consider that England is years ahead of us in social legislation and labor laws.

And if democracy calls for statesmen responsive to public opinion we might consider the responsibility which has turned England's prime minister in his tracks, made him stand fast against aggression because the stout hearts of his people orders it. Rarely has such history been made and never perhaps so threatening a tide been turned as the surge of British determination to have done with surrender to dictators and by the effect of that determination upon faltering British statesmen.

Many will be speculating upon the nature of the British royal visit and reception if magnetic Edward rather than pale George were King. England might have forgiven Edward VIII much to have him now as her symbol when so much dependence is being put upon it for holding the country together and making friends around the world. Inasmuch as he was not content to be merely a symbol, Edward was not satisfactory, but in so far as he was a symbol none could have been more perfect to the purpose.

GOOD MORNING

By LOUIE D. NEWTON.

HEARTENING GAINS.

Last Sunday I read a summary of the various reports made at the recent session of the Southern Baptist convention, and a number of friends who listened to the service over radio have asked me to publish these figures in my column that they might have a copy of these heartening gains, which I am glad to do with the hope that none will take this as an effort to boast over the work of our Baptist people. Following figures are based on the reports for the year 1938, and the gains indicated are in comparison with the year 1937:

Number of churches, 24,932, gain 88.
Ordained ministers, 22,075, gain 386.
Baptisms in 1938, 256,814, gain 52,247.
Church members in 1938, 4,770,185, gain 174,583.
Sunday schools, 23,514, gain 203.
Enrollment in schools, 3,368,851, gain 157,144.
Training unions, 38,202, gain 2,849.
Enrollment in unions, 805,945, gain 63,738.
W. M. U. organizations, 38,597, gain 4,003.
W. M. U. contributions, $2,614,556, gain $257,553.
Meeting houses, 22,824, gain 85.
Pastors' homes, 3,868, gain 96.

Value church property, $210,446,838, gain $3,778,425.
Total gifts of Southern Baptists in 1938, $35,265,340, gain $2,999,653.

On the train from Oklahoma City to Little Rock, Bishop Selectman, of the Methodist Church, came into the lounge and, finding himself in the midst of a group of Southern Baptists on their way home from the convention, he asked us to tell him what the reports indicated as to evangelism, gifts to missions, etc. After going over the above figures, the bishop said: "Our Methodist people rejoice with you in this splendid report of progress for the past year. Our people show substantial gains for 1938, and I am happy to believe that all along the line there is a steady growth in the churches of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Baptists do rejoice to know of the prosperity of our neighbor churches of whatever creed, race or nation. It is hopeful and heartening indication of progress in the most important of all spheres, namely, the spiritual. I am fully convinced that we are nearing a world revival in religion. And I am equally certain that a revival of religion is the one and only solvent for our present world upheaval.

UNIVERSITY SYSTEM PWA GRANT REVIVED

Projects at Athens, Three State Colleges Would Cost $815,000.

Four university projects at Athens and three libraries for state colleges at Dahlonega, Tifton and Valdosta, costing an estimated total of $815,000, were reinstated by the Public Works Administration yesterday in Washington.

This was accomplished by reviving grants of $367,190 which had been revoked recently because the state failed to provide its share of the costs.

Dr. S. V. Sanford, chancellor of the University System, was in Washington last Thursday and Friday, and it was understood that new proposals were submitted in behalf of the state at that time.

Washington's PWA officials announced that Georgia now had made satisfactory arrangements to provide its share. However, no announcement was forthcoming as to the details of the new arrangement.

In Athens last night Dr. Sanford said he assured PWA officials that Georgia funds "would be forthcoming" by the time they were needed for actual construction of the buildings. When the new state fiscal year begins July approximately $400,000 in building funds of the university system are scheduled for release.

In addition to the libraries, the structures arranged for are a dairy products building, and auditorium-fine arts building, a dining hall for girls and a dormitory for boys, all at Athens.

Application for additional $250,000 federal funds for equipment already is pending.

Juvenile Delinquency Is Deplored As the Forerunner of Adult Crime

Judge Watkins Names Defective, Vicious Homes, Bad Associates, Poverty as Major Causes for Crimes of Youngsters Hailed Into Court.

By YOLANDE GWIN.

(This is the first in a series of four articles on child delinquency and the operations of the Fulton county juvenile court prepared by Miss Gwin after consultation with Judge Garland Watkins and other officials of the juvenile court.)

What price delinquency?

Juvenile delinquency, the forerunner of adult crime, is reflecting with growing emphasis the injury to society today. The extent of juvenile delinquency in Fulton county only can be reckoned in cases which are recorded in official charts and those tried "off the record" by Judge Garland Watkins, who occupies the bench at the court. Atlanta boasts the lowest delinquent rate of any city in the south.

The official report of 1938 included 1,272 delinquent cases, 269 neglect cases, 57 reference cases, 50 out-of-town correspondence cases and 301 cases brought over on probation.

The steady influx of families into Atlanta from surrounding rural areas, plus existing local conditions, are forces producing delinquency.

Delinquency such as larceny, truancy, breaking and entering into homes and stores and so on, is traceable to four major causes, according to Judge Watkins. These are defective homes, vicious homes, bad associates and poverty.

Defective homes, he points out, create a dynamic background which causes discord in youthful minds and which is especially harmful because of the child's formative mental stage.

Judge Watkins says: "I have often seen cases where the child in my court comes from a family where there is no discipline. This can be accounted for by lack of parental control, and lack of co-operation with each other for the best interests of the child. Then there are parents who are too lenient. This causes a child to believe he can commit a minor offense and get away with it."

"On the other hand," he continued, "parents who are too severe soon find that daughters and sons are running away to find freedom denied at home. Parents then have no discipline with their children because they have no discipline themselves."

Too Much Companionship.

To carry the pal or companionship idiosyncrasy too far with a child will often cause insolence and an overbearing sense of his being "above" his parents mentally and socially, Judge Watkins pointed out. The outcome of this is discord in the family circle.

Physical disabilities of parents tend to form a background for delinquency, according to juvenile court officials. Parents who are old, sick, nervous and high strung are excitable. The resulting confusion and discord often leads to the child's running away. Homes broken by divorce are also factors leading to delinquency cases. If both parents are forced to work, the child is usually left to shift for himself. Nine times out of ten he shifts in the wrong direction.

Wicked Homes. A second factor in creating the delinquent scene are vicious homes. In these places immoral conditions exist, drunkenness is always apparent and a generally bad outlook is present. All the ugliness of life can be pictured in these homes.

"What chance, then, has a child in a home of this type? What reason has a young girl or boy to go straight when parents seem to exist under such conditions with no respect to law or decency?" Judge Watkins asks. "A child follows naturally in his parents' footsteps," he answers.

"There is no truer saying in the world than 'an idle brain is the devil's workshop,'" says

Judge Watkins. "This is a fine illustration of the third factor of delinquent conditions, bad associates. The only way to overcome this is recondition family relationships. If a child is happy at home he will not want to run in the streets with bad associates. In crowded homes, children are exposed to influences that make poor citizens. Children who run in the streets, who cultivate bad associates become liabilities rather than assets to the community. They are victims of bad and malicious environment."

Bad Associates. "Bad associates are destructive forces which sap a child's moral vitality. Joining the gang for execution of minor offenses leads to future roles of gangsters. This is no disapproval of neighborhood gangs, if it's a gang for wholesome pastime. This can be seen in the neighborhood football and baseball teams, the hiking clubs or the tennis clubs."

Poverty, the fourth cause for establishing delinquent cases, offers an economic problem so far unsolved by legal or business means. The mills of grinding fate grind the packed districts of great cities. The greater the herding the harder they grind. Atlanta offers city hope, and new life to the so-called immigrants who come in from the country districts to face a new life and new living conditions.

Crowded Homes. The result of this relentless grinding is a devitalized product difficult for a city to assimilate and affecting its moral and physical health. Men, women and children, sometimes as many as four and five persons, live in one room. They are packed into cramped quarters, too small for comfort, decency or sanitary living.

It's not their idea of life to spend days cooped together in this manner, says Judge Watkins. Poverty is responsible. Poverty causes unrest, unhappiness and dissatisfaction. Hungry, crying children want food; they want clothes to keep warm; they want yards to play instead of back alleys and traffic-filled streets.

Children can't envision future lives of crime for a few minor offenses to ease the pain of the moment. They steal food when they are hungry. They beg for money to run away for part-time escape.

But they run within the shadow of the juvenile court. Their delinquent era has begun.

(The second of Miss Gwin's articles on the juvenile court will appear tomorrow.)

RECREATION SCHOOL WILL OPEN JUNE 12

Institute To Be First of Its Kind in Atlanta.

Atlanta's first recreational training institute will be opened June 12 by the National Recreation Association in conjunction with the Emory summer school and with a negro institute at Atlanta University. It was announced yesterday.

Reynold E. Carlson, nature activities specialist of the National Recreation school, will direct. Faculty members will include Miss Ethel M. Bowers, former physical director at Brenau, and Frank A. Staple, of Auburn, who will teach arts and crafts.

The institute, sponsored in Atlanta by the Atlanta Social and Planning Council and the city parks department, is designed to give civic leaders an understanding of the significance of leisure in relation to home, church, school and public and private recreational agencies.

EUROPEAN CONFLICT SEEN AS UNLIKELY

Japanese Newsmen, Here on Tour, Think War Remote.

Prospects of a European war in the near future were held remote yesterday by Masuo Kato, Washington representative of Domei, Japanese news agency, who was in Atlanta on an educational tour through the south.

Kato said he believed both Germany and Italy wished to accomplish their objectives without war if possible and added he could see no danger of a major conflict for a year at least. The Washington correspondent said Japan wished to remain free of European entanglements and expressed the opinion his country "would remain on the sidelines" in the event of war.

Turning to the relations between Japan and China, Kato said Japan was not concerned essentially with conquest in China. He said his people were more interested in developing China and her resources.

Most of the Japanese are well informed on current world happenings, especially the European situation, Kato declared. He said censorship was not as rigid as in many countries.

Relations between the United States and Japan are good, the correspondent declared. He added that Japan wished to become even more friendly with America.

Kato has been in this country for six years and proclaims himself "a student of the United States." He plans to return to his native land in about a month. He left Atlanta yesterday afternoon for New Orleans.

MRS. W. L. HUNNICUTT FUNERAL RITES TODAY

Final rites for Mrs. Wilbur L. (Julie) Hunnicutt, of 34 Rockyford road, well-known church and civic worker, who died Monday night, will be conducted at 2 o'clock this afternoon at Spring Hill.

The Rev. J. R. Turner and the Rev. E. F. Dempsey will officiate and burial will be in West View cemetery under direction of H. M. Patterson & Son. She was president of the Kirkwood Civic league and an active member of the Kirkwood Methodist church.

Deatherage Unfolds Tale Of Anti-Communist Move

Defiant Witness Forcibly Seated at Dies Probe by Two Policemen; McWhirter Also Testifies; Cites Anti-Semitic Speech by Moseley.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—(P)—A tale of a loosely interlocking international anti-Communist movement heading up in Italy and Germany was unfolded before the Dies committee today by a stormy and defiant witness who interspersed his testimony with references to "the Jew problem," "Jew bankers" and "Jew Communists."

The witness was George E. Deatherage, national commander of the Knights of the White Camellia, whose oath, "the same as a Klansman's oath," he said, forbade him to say how many members his organization has, where its chapters are located, and who the leaders are. The Jews, he added, were watching closely and had identified some leaders already.

Forcibly Seated.

Otherwise, he proved a worthy witness, but only after a short and angry exchange with Chairman Dies, Democrat, Texas, had ended with two brawny capitol policemen forcibly seating him upon the witness chair. Called to the stand, he interrupted the routine of oath taking by blurted:

"Just a minute, is this a Christian oath, I'm taking? I want your assurance that it is."

"My assurance wouldn't add to it," Dies replied, "raise your right hand."

McWhirter Not So Voluble.

Not so voluble was his predecessor on the witness stand, Felix McWhirter, Indianapolis banker, who had corresponded with Campbell and received his reports on a brewing Communist revolution in this country, reports which committee members have repeatedly said contained anti-Semitic propaganda.

He told of how the Indiana Republican state committee invited Major General George Van Horn Moseley, United States army, retired, to speak at a luncheon in Indianapolis. Previously he had never seen any anti-Semitic statements in Moseley's speech, he added, but in Indianapolis, the general "overstepped the line."

Lists Other Groups.

Deatherage told the committee he maintained contact with other similar organizations in this country, mentioning the "Silver Shirts" and the "Anglo-Saxon Federation," by correspondence and an exchange of literature. All, he said, maintained an informal liaison with the movement abroad. An effort to establish a directing head was being made in Italy by one "Colsech," he added, and in Germany there was an international anti-Communist association which held an annual convention and with which literature was exchanged.

In answer to questions, the witness said that leaders of the various groups with which he kept contact had many times discussed the possibility of forming a nation-wide organization but no one had "appeared on the scene big enough to inspire confidence."

There were, he continued, 500 organizations, which would join such a united movement "overnight."

Moseley Cited. Campbell's letter of reply, previously put in the record, formed the basis, for extensive questioning. It said they should keep General Moseley surrounded by men who were "not afraid of death" in case "our international friends" entered the situation.

"Who did you mean by 'our international friends'?" Whitley asked.

"The international Jew bankers," Deatherage replied. "Do you want me to name them?" "That won't be necessary."

He agreed in part, he said, with a statement by Campbell that the situation had gone so far in this country that "the only remedy" was for a "military court" to take control of the federal government and each of the 48 states.

"If you did put a military court in here and clarify this thing, you would obviate the necessity and possibility of what has happened in Spain because we have exactly the same situation. I say most any expedient is justified that is peaceful."

Fred Snite Jr. Goes Sight-Seeing In Iron Lung on His Pilgrimage

Youth Views Cathedral of Chartres En Route to Shrine.

TOURS, France, May 23.—(AP)—Fred Snite Jr. went sight-seeing in an iron lung today on his pilgrimage from the United States to the Shrine of the Virgin Mary at Lourdes.

Through a panoramic periscope erected on the respirator in which he lay, the youth viewed historic Chartres cathedral during the trip from Le Havre to Tours, where he stopped tonight. He landed at Le Havre this morning.

The specially-built trailer in which he is riding was delayed by a flat tire, but made the 250-mile journey in 10 hours. It was accompanied by two trucks and a limousine.

"I don't feel at all tired," he said upon his arrival here. "I slept the last hour of the trip. The most interesting thing of the day was the Cathedral of Chartres."

Most of this countryside Snite already knows from an automobile trip he took in 1931, before he was afflicted with paralysis.

He has lived in an iron lung for three years, since he was stricken at Peiping, on a world tour.

About 2,000 persons crowded around the hotel here as he was rolled from his trailer into the library, which was converted into a temporary hospital room for his one-night stay.

6-DAY DELAY WON BY HUIET COUNSEL

Attorneys Ask Legal Proof of Authenticity of James' Documents.

Attorneys for State Labor Commissioner Ben T. Huie won a six-day postponement yesterday in the hearing on a petition by Lemuel P. James for an injunction against "interference" with his position in the labor department.

Huie's attorneys demanded legal proof of the authenticity of documents presented by James, one his commission as director of the unemployment compensation division and the other an order authorizing him to take a civil service examination for the post.

James' attorney, Senator Paul Lindsay, of Decatur, said he needed time to obtain affidavits concerning the documents. The case was continued until next Monday.

Huie in answer to James' petition asserted the latter was "wholly incompetent, inefficient and insubordinate in the administration of his office in that he devoted a substantial part of his time in carrying on political intrigues both in and out of the labor department."

In his petition, filed with Superior Judge Virlyn B. Moore, James asked the court to enjoin Huie from attempting to oust him from a "statutory" office, from interfering with his official duties, and from hindering him in any way.

G.O.P. COMMITTEEMAN QUILTS FLORIDA POST

MELBOURNE, Fla., May 23.—(AP)—C. H. McNulty, chairman of the state Republican committee, announced today that John P. Harris, Palm Beach, had resigned as national committeeman for Florida.

McNulty issued a call for the state committee to meet in Orlando June 22 to fill the vacancy. A statewide rally will be held in connection with the meeting.

McNulty said Harris resigned because of ill health. He had been national committeeman for seven years.

TECH ROTC MEN GET APPOINTMENTS

One to Navy, One to Marines and Two to Academy at Annapolis.

One member of the graduating class of the Naval ROTC at Georgia Tech will be commissioned an ensign in the navy, another a second lieutenant in the marines, while two other Tech students have received appointments to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, it was announced yesterday.

Robert Lee Watson, 22, of Atlanta, will be commissioned ensign in the naval supply corps, and sent to study at the Naval Finance and Supply school at Philadelphia naval yard. Watson is a graduate of Boys' High, and will be awarded a B. S. degree in industrial management this June. He lives at 875 Dill avenue, S. W.

William Gay Thrash, 22, of 24 East Lake drive, will receive the marine commission, and will attend the Marine Corps Basic school, also at the Philadelphia naval yard. Thrash, another Boys' High alumnus, will graduate with a B. S. in civil engineering degree. At Tech, he was a member of the varsity football squad and the swimming and track teams.

The Tech students to be selected for the Naval Academy are William McKnight Pardee, 18, of 1709 Emory road, and Leslie Richmond Heseltun, 18, of San Diego, Cal. They were chosen after competitive examinations and will report to Annapolis in June. Pardee, ranking second in the tests, has completed one year at Tech, while Heseltun, who stood third, has finished two years.

ALUMNI OF EMORY WILL OPEN CLINICS

300 Doctors Expected To Make Study.

Emory University's Medical Alumni Association will open its seventeenth annual clinic week next Tuesday, May 30, at Grady hospital with registration of an expected 300 doctors from southeastern states, according to Dr. Marion C. Pruitt, secretary of the association.

Designed to give post-graduate clinical study for practicing physicians, the clinics will begin at 8 o'clock on Tuesday morning and will continue through Friday of next week. Medical alumni Friday night will hold their annual banquet at the Henry Grady hotel.

On Wednesday evening, individual class reunions will be held for all groups represented. Dr. Pruitt said. This year's attendance is expected to be the largest since the clinics were first sponsored in 1923. Dr. B. Cosby Bird, of Montgomery, Ala., is president of the Medical Alumni Association. Other officers are first vice president, Dr. Hugh Bailey, Atlanta, and second vice president, Dr. James Chambers, Atlanta. Doctors present will also attend Emory's annual alumni day on Saturday, June 3, with Dr. Samuel C. Dobbs as alumni day orator.

Woodfin Cavender Will Head Seniors Next Term.

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION. ATHENS, Ga., May 23.—Class officers for 1939-40 at the University of Georgia were announced here today following a general campus election.

Woodfin Cavender, of Millwood, was chosen president of the senior class. Other senior officers are Thomas J. Willis, of Daytona Beach, Fla., vice president, and Malcolm Stewart, of Sylvester, secretary-treasurer.

Now junior class officers are Robert Cassels, of Atlanta, president; Evan Kelley, of Grovetown, vice president, and J. T. Moss, of Winterville, secretary-treasurer. In the sophomore class election, Robert Middleton, of Brunswick, was chosen president; Dennis Stogdill, of Chickamauga, vice president, and Archie Walker, of Ft. Gaines, secretary-treasurer.

Officers of the Co-ordinate College sophomore class next year will be Dot Blank, of Thomaston, president; Bonnie Ruth McCay, of Athens, vice president, and Mary Ruth Hillis, of Girard, secretary-treasurer.

ARNALL UPHOLDS POWER OF PAROLE

Board Has Authority, Economy Probers Told.

The authority to parole granted the State Prison and Parole Board by the state legislature was entirely constitutional, the Georgia house economy board created were informed yesterday by Attorney General Ellis Arnall.

In its inquiry into state affairs the committee asked Arnall whether the general assembly could delegate the power of parole to the new economy board created by the 1937-38 special session. "It is nowhere stated in that provision of the constitution," Arnall said, "or in any other part of the constitution that the power of parole is limited solely to the chief executive."

FLORIDA HOUSE KILLS PLAN TO 'SAVE' 3 DAYS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 23.

(AP)—The house turned down today a plan for saving three days of the 60-day Florida legislative session until December, when a special commission would report on the state's ad valorem tax system. The vote against the resolution was 72 to 19.

FULTON'S FINANCES OUTLINED TO JURORS

Conference Follows Welfare Board's Plea for More Relief.

A report on county financial affairs was understood to have been given a special committee of the Fulton county grand jury yesterday afternoon following a joint meeting of the county commissioners and public welfare board Monday night at which members of the welfare board appealed for additional monthly relief funds from the county.

James L. Respass, county auditor, was summoned to appear before the committee after Foreman T. L. Lyons announced that the jury members will make a definite recommendation on taxes for relief. A preceding jury recommended a 2-1-4 mill levy, which commissioners asserted will allow them to put up only $36,000 a month, whereas the welfare board insists upon a total of $48,500 for an "adequate fund" in relief.

In the meantime, an investigation of 500-odd "picked at random" cases from the relief rolls is being conducted. I. Gloer Halley, chairman of the county juvenile committee of the commission, said the report on the investigation "promises to be interesting" when it is completed, probably within a week.

County doctors are examining relief recipients at the rate of 20 or 30 a day.

'Only Angels (Jean and Cary) Have Wings'

"Only Angels Have Wings," a story of aviation in South America, will open tomorrow at the Rialto theater, starring Jean Arthur and Cary Grant, above.

AVIATION PICTURE TO OPEN AT RIALTO

'Only Angels Have Wings' Begins Tomorrow.

Howard Hawks' new film saga, "Only Angels Have Wings," opens at the Rialto tomorrow.

Co-starring Cary Grant and Jean Arthur, this picture is a story of reckless young Americans, aviators and adventurers, in the tropical wilds of South America. There are daring, death-defying flights, torrid romance and comedy that laughs in the face of danger. It is, in short, a romantic, comedy-packed, dramatic thriller of the finest sort.

The supporting cast includes Thomas Mitchell, Richard Barthelmess, Rita Hayworth, Noah Beery Jr., Sig Ruman and Allyn Joslyn.

ENTERS JIM GILLIS' ROOM, GETS YEAR

Youth Found Guilty of Breaking Into Premises.

Found guilty of breaking into the hotel room of Jim Gillis, chairman of the state Democratic executive committee and member of the highway board, Phillip McFadden yesterday was sentenced in Fulton superior court to serve a 12-month term.

Assistant Solicitor General E. E. Andrews charged that McFadden was discovered in Gillis' room at a downtown hotel and that a pass key with which the door had been opened was in his possession. The jury sentenced the youth to from one to two years but recommended to Judge Walter Hendrix that the case be treated as a misdemeanor, which was done.

WORLD FAIR URGED FOR NEW ORLEANS

City Offers Better Site Than New York, Publisher Tells South.

NEW ORLEANS, May 23.—(AP) The suggestion that New Orleans stage an exposition similar to those now in New York and San Francisco was advanced here today by James M. Thomson, publisher of the New Orleans Item, following a recent trip to New York and Washington.

"The people of New Orleans and of the south ought to consider the desirability of holding an exposition here," Mr. Thomson said in a series of articles describing his impressions of the New York World's Fair.

"I would say that the New York exposition has no such location as would be found for an exposition at New Orleans along Lake Pontchartrain," he said. "However, with $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 spent by New Orleans to reclaim that waterfront, to put in sewerage, drainage and streets, we have almost half the money spent that is needed to be spent for an exposition."

"I think New Orleans and the south would do well to consider some type of specialized exposition. No date for the proposed fair was suggested."

Forty-two covered bridges are still in use in North Carolina.

BYRD CHALLENGES SPENDING THEORY OUTLINED BY F.D.R.

Too Make Debt Popular Is a Dangerous Doctrine To Preach, Economy Bloc Leader Warns.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—(AP)—Challenging spending theories advanced by President Roosevelt last night, Senator Byrd, Democrat, Virginia, said tonight that "to minimize the evils of debt—to make debt popular—is a dangerous doctrine to preach."

Mr. Roosevelt suggested in an address to the American Retail Federation that the debt be considered in relation to the nation's assets. He asked his listeners to remember that the federal debt is an internal one and added that "a reasonable internal debt will not impoverish our children."

Byrd, a member of the senate "economy bloc," said in a statement that the President's speech demonstrated that he had accepted "hook, line and sinker" the theory "of spending and lending to purchase prosperity." The Virginia senator credited this theory to Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board.

Debt Patriotic? The government, Byrd added, not only has offered federal grants to communities "but actually federal agents have visited communities and urged acceptance of public funds as a patriotic contribution to recovery." Then he asked:

"Is it any wonder that such a policy, once entrenched, now presents nearly insurmountable difficulties to control?"

"The cold facts remain that after six years of Eccles spending for recovery our problems remain unsolved—we have great unemployment and an increased number on relief rolls, as well as a virtual stagnation of business expansion—and we have a debt that can only be paid through the toll and industry of many future generations of Americans."

Talk of a new federal spending program continued on Capitol Hill, with several senators saying that an effort undoubtedly would be made to tack a new public works appropriation on the forthcoming work relief bill.

CROWD ON SUBWAY GRABS $600 LOOT BANDITS DROPPED

NEW YORK, May 23.—(AP)—A subway crowd today made away with $600 of a pay roll of $989 stolen shortly before from a dress manufacturer.

Police had seized two men, one of them on the 42d street platform of the city independent subway, and charged them with snatching a pay roll from John Mazzola.

The loot, in bills of one, five and ten-dollar denomination, was dropped on the subway platform and eager commuters pounced on it before the officers could interfere.

STATE BAR MEETING STARTS TOMORROW

1,200 Lawyers Are Expected To Attend Convention Here.

The prosecution and the defense will be represented by an equal share of the best legal minds in Georgia when the Georgia Bar Association assembles in Atlanta tomorrow for its annual convention. More than 1,200 Georgia lawyers are expected to attend.

Highlight of the opening day will be the dinner tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock at the Biltmore hotel assembling the Georgia Prosecuting Attorneys' Association, composed of the prosecuting officers of Georgia and their assistants.

Arnall to Speak. Attorney General Ellis A. Arnall, as principal speaker, will lead a discussion of "The Problem of Proof as to Other Offenses." President of the association this year is J. Cecil Davis, solicitor general of Warrenton, Ga.

On the general program of the bar association will be Carl McFarland, of Washington, D. C., former assistant attorney general of the United States, who will discuss "Administrative Law—Its Symptoms and Diagnosis."

Until March 29, 1939, McFarland was an assistant attorney general of the United States when he resigned to become associated with former Attorney General Homer Cummings in the practice of law in Washington, D. C.

Won Ross Award. In 1934 McFarland was given the Ross award of the American Bar Association for his essay upon "Administrative Agencies in Government and the Effect Thereon of Constitutional Limitations." In 1939 he was appointed a member of the "Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure."

McFarland is the author of "Judicial Control of the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission" and is the co-author (with Attorney General Homer Cummings) of the well-known book, "Federal Justice."

Other speakers will include Ashley Sellers, head attorney for the United States Department of Agriculture, and Colonel O. R. McGuire, counsel for the comptroller-general of the United States.

BLOWOUT HURLS TRUCK CRASHING INTO POLE

Blowout of a left rear tire sent a laundry truck crashing into a telephone pole on Hunter street, near Burbank drive, but the driver escaped serious injury yesterday afternoon.

The driver, G. W. Lee, 58, of 305 Murray Hill avenue, suffered a broken left jaw and severe face and leg bruises. He was dismissed from Grady hospital following treatment.

Dinner-Dance Inaugurates Summer Season at Piedmont Driving Club

The summer season was inaugurated last night at the Piedmont Driving Club when several hundred members of the Atlanta society and prominent visitors assembled on the club terrace for the annual dinner-dance marking the first of the many all fresco affairs to be given during the next three months.

MRS. MANSFIELD, CIVIC LEADER, DIES

Former Treasurer of Red Cross Chapter Will Be Buried Today.

Mrs. W. E. Mansfield, former treasurer of the Atlanta Red Cross chapter and of the Travelers' Aid Society, died unexpectedly yesterday morning at her home, 532 Peoples street, S. W., just one day after her golden wedding celebration.

A native of Iowa, Mrs. Mansfield had made her home here for nearly 40 years and was prominently identified with church, civic and cultural interests for much of that period. She was a member of the Central Congregational church and had been inactive recently on account of failing health.

Mrs. Mansfield had been connected with the Travelers' Aid Society here for 33 years, serving at various times as second vice president, recording secretary, auditor and first vice president, in addition to more than 15 years as treasurer.

Surviving are her husband, Atlanta agent for the International Paper Sales Company; two sons, W. H. and Lawrence E. Mansfield; a sister, Mrs. J. E. Brown, and a brother, M. K. Mix. Funeral services will be conducted at 2 o'clock this afternoon at the residence. Burial will be in West View cemetery under direction of H. M. Patterson & Son.

Atlantans To Attend Assembly Of Presbyterian Church Tomorrow

79th Meeting Stated at Summer Training School Site in Montreat, N. C.; Merger With Northern Group To Be Considered; Judge Everett's Successor To Be Named.

Delegates from the Atlanta Presbytery and officials of assembly committees in Atlanta will leave this afternoon and tonight for Montreat, N. C., to attend the seventy-ninth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (South), which convenes at the assembly's summer training school site tomorrow.

Heading the local delegation will be Willis M. Everett Sr., moderator of the Southern Presbyterian church, and Dr. William W. Gardner, pastor of First Presbyterian church, who will preach the opening sermon.

Other commissioners and alternates from Atlanta Presbytery will be the Rev. H. E. Russell, A. T. Peacock, E. A. Brooks, W. G. Marks, the Rev. A. J. Warner and the Rev. E. P. Carson, all of Atlanta, and the Rev. R. F. Johnson, Decatur; the Rev. B. W. Baker, Lawrenceville; Eugene S. Daniel, Jackson; Rev. C. F. Monk, McDonough; Ernest Perkins, Austell; C. T. Henderson, Gabbettville; J. J. McKnight, McDonough, and Colonel J. C. Woodward, College Park.

Included among committee officials who will attend are Dr. B. K. Tenney, secretary of the committee on stewardship and finance; Dr. Homer McMillan, executive secretary, and Dr. Claude H. Pritchard, educational secretary.

Reunion of the branches has been discussed "spasmodically" ever since the original schism in the War Between the States. During the last few years sentiment for unification has become stronger.

One of the first matters to be considered by the commissioners will be the election of a successor to Judge Everett as moderator, which will take place tomorrow.

Previously he had held pastorate at the Capitol View, Woodland Hills, Western Heights and Fortified Hills Baptist churches, all in and around Atlanta.

Other survivors are his wife; a daughter, Mrs. W. A. Lee, of Atlanta; three other sons, J. E., J. D. and A. G. Hendley, and four daughters, C. E. Hendley, of Artesia, Miss.; R. M. Hendley, of Montgomery, Ala.; J. R. Hendley, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.; and Jeff Hendley, of Abbeville, Ala.

Funeral services will be conducted at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning at Spring Hill.

the establishment of a minimum will cause some increase to workers earning more than this amount because of the pressure to retain customary occupational differentials.

Living Costs Cited. Pointing out that labor costs represented only a part of total manufacturing costs, the report estimated that the increase in manufacturing costs in the south would be from 2.25 to 3.24 per cent.

As to area classifications or differentials, the report said, "there was no request for a differential for the southeast where the bulk of the cotton textile industry is located." There were requests for mills located in Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Mississippi.

The cost of living difference between southeastern and southwestern areas was 3.6 per cent in favor of the latter.

Score Make-up of Group. The minority report attacked the composition of the committee as failing to meet the requirements of the act that "the administrator shall give due regard to the geographical regions in which the industry is carried on."

"Four of the seven public members, five of the seven employee members and three of the seven employer members—a total of 12 of the 21 members of industry committee No. 1—were appointed from non-cotton-growing states," the minority report said. "In other words, while 75 to 80 per cent of the industry which would be directly affected by a wage order is located in the south, a majority of the committee as a whole and an overwhelming majority of one of its groups (employees) was appointed from other sections."

The minority report further protested that the committee "in arriving at its recommendations, failed to take into account factors required by the act to be taken into account in making a recommendation for a wage order."

Under this heading the minority

FORESTERS BEGIN CONFERENCE HERE

Supervisors To Map Plans for Coming Year During 3-Day Meeting.

Forest supervisors of national forests in North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas convened here yesterday for their annual three-day conference with Joseph G. Kircher, regional forester.

Meetings are being held in the forest service's offices in the Glenn building.

The purpose of the conference, Kircher said, is to map out annual work plans for each individual forest. Included among the objectives outlined for the coming year are the improvement of fire protection organization, increased sale of publicly owned timber to wood-using industries adjacent to the forests and discussion of additional wild life and recreational areas to be constructed.

CHARLES T. SHELOR FOUND DEAD IN CAR

Heart Attack Fatal to Tech Graduate, 24.

Charles Thomas Shelor, 24, of 1038 Cleburne avenue, N. E., was found dead yesterday morning slumped over the steering wheel of an automobile parked on North avenue between the Peachtree. A heart attack was given as the cause.

Shelor, who was graduated from Tech last year, was employed by the Georgia Tech College Inn. He was a member of the Druid Hills Presbyterian church and the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity.

Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Willie Grogan Shelor; a sister, Mrs. D. E. Sudduth, of Roswell, and two brothers, E. G. and W. P. Shelor.

Services will be conducted at 3:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at Spring Hill by the Rev. W. M. Elliott. Burial will be in Oakland cemetery under direction of H. M. Patterson & Son.

report said that "Among the 'economic' or 'competitive' single conditions or factors not considered by the committee, or given wholly inadequate consideration, may be mentioned: freight rates; taxation; economic consequences, in terms of increased purchasing power, of any given wage recommendation; effect of reciprocal trade treaties; probable effect of pending cotton export subsidies; effect of government loans on prices and the relationship of these artificial controls to the problems of the increasing use of substitutes and foreign competition."

Additional Dissatisfaction. The minority report further attacked the committee's action for failure "to give adequate consideration to the possible desirability of a regional differential." This section of the minority report added "living costs" to the factors to which it alleged the committee had not given "adequate consideration." The purpose of the fair labor standards act, it said at this point, "is not to perpetuate the punitive program of the carpet-bagger under the guise of 'equalizing' existing competitive conditions as such."

Should the administrator approve the majority recommendation after holding the scheduled public hearing, he may legalize it with a wage order. He cannot amend a committee recommendation but must refer the matter back to the committee or to another committee for the industry, which he may appoint for such purpose.

Policeman Al Farkas, too young for service in the war, showed up decorated with medals won in athletic competitions—and one for perfect attendance at Sunday school.

EIGHT ORDINARIES TO LIST CANDIDATES

Claud F. Brackett, Seeking Judicial Post, Reveals Result of Poll.

By The Associated Press. Claud F. Brackett, candidate for superior court judge of the Atlanta circuit, said yesterday he had learned ordinaries of eight Georgia counties would place names of candidates on the June 6 election ballot, 11 would not and four were in doubt.

The ballot as authorized by Governor Rivers provided for voting only upon amendments and the Brunswick circuit solicitor generalship.

Brackett seeks the post of the late Judge E. D. Thomas, which the Governor filled by appointment of Judge A. L. Ethelridge, of the Fulton county civil court. Brackett wrote to ordinaries:

"My letters to the ordinaries were mailed out on the night of March 18th," he replied, "and I expect other replies."

He listed counties in which the addition of candidates' names was declined as Warren, Stephens, Emanuel, Richmond, Lowndes, Early, DeKalb, Walton, Walker, Monroe and Fulton.

Names are to be added, he said, in Dawson, Pickens, Wheeler, Seminole, White, McDuffie, Haralson and Taylor counties.

U. S. INVESTIGATES NEWSPRINT TRADE

Canadians Accused of Acting Together To Restrict Competition.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—(AP)—The Justice Department announced today that its agents were investigating trade practices in the newsprint industry.

It asserted that evidence secured by the Federal Trade Commission "indicates that concerted action by Canadian manufacturers restrains freedom of competition in the United States newsprint market."

At the same time it was made known the subpoenas were issued today requiring the presence of witnesses at an inquiry before a federal grand jury at San Francisco. This proceeding, it was stated, is limited to activities of newsprint producers and distributors in the Pacific coast area.

The announcement said: "If it is finally established that agreements in restraint of trade at present govern business in newsprint throughout the Pacific coast area, criminal proceedings should result in the establishment of free competition."

The announcement said that in 1936 all manufacturers increased the base price from $41 to $42 a ton, and in 1937 advanced it to $43.50. In 1938 "most" manufacturers increased the base price to $51 a ton, while a few in the eastern area limited this boost to $49.

"There is a striking uniformity throughout the whole industry in respect to quantity differentials and other trade practices which determine the prices of varying types and quantities of newsprint," it was stated.

Crackers Drop First to Battling Barons, 5 to 4

All in the GAME
by Jack Troy

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 23.—An oft-proved fact in the Southern league is this—

If any club on any given year can get one rookie to really come through, it is considered wonderful.

So the Southern league is seeing, in the rise of the Crackers, a phenomenal thing. The Crackers took over first place largely because of what the rookies did.

One side of the infield is made up of rookies Rubeling and Bolling, and in the outfield rookies Oetting and Rucker are in left and center.

Rookies Harris, Miller, Johnston, Robinson, Stewart and Stein have contributed their share on the mound. When Paul Richards isn't catching, rookie Williams does well enough.

I hope to be soothed with a sandwich if this isn't true, too. Remember a year ago when so much was written about the ability of Rubeling to play second?

Well, old fans viewed the situation with alarm. From past performances, it seemed unlikely two rookies could be stationed on that side of the infield, facing the grandstand, and both come through.

Illness kept Rubing out of action last year and the veteran observers figured their suspicions were justified, but that is a loss of another color now.

In fact, there is something about Rubeling as a second baseman. It really offers a bit of problem.

HE MAY BE THE BEST.

The Rubing may be the best second baseman the Crackers have, including Stan Sperry, who is a good one. Certainly, since he has taken over the bag following Sperry's injury there has been nothing to indicate he isn't fully as good.

Paul Richards freely declares that Rubeling is a great ball player. And he is not sure whether Sperry is the better second baseman. Of course, now, Stan was playing fine ball and hitting at a steady clip when he spiked himself.

And Sperry really hadn't played himself into shape. This problem is not what you could describe exactly as distracting. It doesn't make Richards unhappy because it is so different from last season.

All last year the Crackers went along without a regular second baseman. Everybody except Dick Niehaus had a shot at the bag and the only reason he wasn't given a chance is because he's left-handed.

Now the Crackers have two and both are so good it becomes increasingly more difficult to choose between them. Maybe the Crackers should have bought some uniforms earlier. Because, after all, Joe McCarthy isn't the only manager who has a little trouble deciding on who to play.

THEY DON'T LIKE TO SEE DURHAM.

A little man with the best curve ball in the league is Bob Durham and New Orleans, particularly, was pretty tired of seeing him stride out to the mound in the last innings and baffle the Pelicans.

Nine times out of ten, Durham is good as a stop-gap. The stuff he has on the ball and under the belt, plus his control, makes him easily the best relief pitcher appearing in the Scott circuit.

He's always in the bull pen and the only time rival clubs enjoy seeing him out there is when he is wearing a mitt and warming up some other pitcher.

It's really getting so that certain clubs figure they've got two strikes on them when Durham comes to the rescue.

SMOLL IS IMPROVING.

Clyde Smoll, the left-hander from the Texas league, is improving steadily. Smoll has had a hard time getting started. For one thing, because he has had a cold he found difficult to shake.

But the main thing has been the weather. Smoll is a hot weather performer. It was a bit muggy on Sunday afternoon before the rain and Smoll looked like a cool million in the two innings he worked.

It was extremely canny of Richards, following the hour's delay, to open up with a fresh pitcher. For example, Floyd Stromme was going great for New Orleans, too, but after the

MACK STEWART IS BLASTED OUT IN THIRD FRAME

Atlanta Loses League Lead as Lookouts Win Double-Header.

By JACK TROY.
RICKWOOD PARK, BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 23.—A "one-legged" outfielder came off the bench tonight to beat the Crackers in the opening game of the Baron series, 5 to 4.

The defeat dropped the Crackers into second place, a half-game back of Chattanooga, which won a double-header.

Jack Glynn, former Notre Dame athlete, who has been out of action because of a bad leg injury, hobbled up to the plate in the seventh, blasted the first pitch Pete Stein threw for a triple, and scored Del Savio, who walked, with the tying run. Adair hit a medium fly to center and Rucker's throw was wide of the plate and Glynn hobbled home with the winning run.

After their long day train ride, the Crackers ran the gamut of tough luck in tonight's game. They had the tying and winning runs on base with nobody out in the eighth but couldn't take advantage of the opportunity.

The Barons captured an early three-run lead, but the Crackers evened up the game with a fourth-inning rally. Then in the fifth they scored again to take the lead for the first time.

GIANT KILLERS.

Glynn's hero act cooked their goose, however. It seems to be the destiny of the current Baron club to make it sad for league leaders. They successfully knocked Knoxville and Chattanooga off the top perch and tonight combined luck and skill to make it tough for the Crackers, Southern loop defending champions, who rose from bottom to top in the circuit in little over a month of play.

The Crackers used three pitchers in a vain attempt to win. Stewart started and was relieved by Stein. The latter retired for a pinch-hitter and Durham finished.

Del Wetherell started for the Barons and Kit Carson staggered through as finishing pitcher. Stein was the losing pitcher and Wetherell the winner. It was his third straight win.

It was a low-hitting contest, figuring all the pitchers who saw action. Each team collected eight hits.

Tomorrow night's game will see Harry Johnston, who has won four and lost one, oppose Julian Tubb, who has the same won and lost record for the Barons.

The Barons jumped into the lead in the first inning when Ogorok singled, Luce walked and Dunlap tripled. There were two out and Dunlap was left on third when Arkegeta filed to Oetting.

STEWART RELIEVED.
Stewart was on his way in the third. He walked Adair and Ogorok punched a single to right. Stein, who had been warming up since the first inning, replaced him with none out. Luce promptly hit into a double play, Peters to Rubeling to Bolling, and Adair scored. Stein tossed out Clancy to retire the side.

The Crackers staged a three-run rally and tied the score in the fourth. After Bolling grounded out, Rubeling and Mauldin singled. Mailho forced Mauldin and Rubeling scored. Peters tripled, scoring Mailho, and Rucker also tripled, scoring Peters. Rucker tried to make home and was out on a close play at the plate.

The Crackers forged ahead in the fifth. Oetting popped up, but Richards walked. Stein sacrificed and Bolling's single scored Richards.

GLYNN TRIPLES.
Jack Glynn, who broke in Southern league ball against Atlanta with a home run with the bases loaded last season, batted for Wetherell in the seventh and tripled to score Del Savio, who walked, tying up the game. Adair filed to Rucker and Glynn scored after the catch, sending the Barons ahead again. Glynn has been out of the Baron lineup because of injury.

The Crackers blew a golden opportunity in the eighth. Williams batted for Stein and beat out a hit. Bolling singled to right. Miller ran for Williams and was forced at third. Mauldin hit into a double play, Arkegeta to Clancy.

Smithies Play G.M.A. In Important Contest

Boys' High Battles Commercial in Another Prep Game; Play-Off May Be Necessary.

Boys' High, Tech High and G. M. A. will move one step nearer settlement of the city prep baseball championship with games this afternoon.

Boys' High plays Commercial at Piedmont park and Tech High journeys to College Park to play the Cadets at 3:30 o'clock.

The final game of the season is scheduled for Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock when Boys' High plays G. M. A. on the College Park diamond.

Tech High, the defending champion, went into a tie with Boys' High for the lead with a victory Monday afternoon over Commercial High.

G. M. A. holds the key to the prep situation and has a fine chance to throw the league into a three-way tie with Boys' High and Tech High. The Cadets can win both their postponed games with the league leaders and a play-off between the three will be necessary.

It's the tightest spot the prep league has been in years and seldom ever has it been necessary to play any games after the close of the regular season.

Boys' High has only one dependable hurler, Jack McKinney, who gave the Purples a fighting chance with a fine exhibition of pitching and batting in beating Tech High last week. McKinney will be the Purples' sole hope against Commercial this afternoon.

G. M. A. has Hodges, one of the best pitchers ever to come into the prep league, as its main dependence and he most likely will be called on to hurl today against Tech High and again Saturday against Boys' High.

CONFERENCE HELD.
A conference was held Tuesday afternoon between Coaches Doyal, of Boys' High; Sam Burbage, of G. M. A., and Sidney Scarborough, of Tech High, to arrange for the postponed games arranged.

G. M. A. has not played in more than a week, so Coach Burbage was anxious to play both teams and get back into the championship race himself.

G. M. A.'s annual commencement exercises begin Friday and school will be out next week, but with a chance at the prep baseball championship, the two remaining postponed games will be played and a championship will be played if necessary.

Coach Sidney Scarborough will send either Mike Dorsch or Glenn Bishman against the Cadets this afternoon since Wilson was used Monday against Commercial.

Ed Tanner has returned to form and will be ready for pitching duties today if necessary, though he may not start.

Yates in 3d Round Of British Amateur After Winning, 2-1

Charlie Defeats Cameron With Consistent Play; Atlantan Meets Dick Chapman, Fellow American, in Next Test.

HOYLAKE, England, May 23.—(AP)—Charlie Yates, of Atlanta, defended the British amateur golf championship with his heart today and advanced to the third round, where tomorrow he meets Dick Chapman, of Greenwich, Conn.

Struggling against a disbeliever set of wooden clubs, Yates stood up against the greatest scoring spree of the tournament and finally beat the Scottish internationalist, Donald Cameron, 2 and 1.

Chapman, more consistent than any man in the field, rattled through the first 13 holes in four under 4s and beat Maurice Budd, 6-foot 3-inch Englishman, 5 and 3. One American, slaying Ned Phillips, of Philadelphia, was defeated by John Morrison on the last green, and two other United States players, tennis pro Ellsworth Vines, and "Trailer Bill" Holt, of Syracuse, N. Y., will play tomorrow for the first time.

HISTORIC FEATS.
Yates played nine holes of golf today that deserve to be remembered in this historic club along with the feats of Old John Ball, Bob Jones and Walter Hagen.

'Baron of Sauerkraut' Gets in at 3 A.M.; Boots Admits Mulishness.

CINCINNATI, May 23.—(AP)—Cletus Elwood (Boots) Poffenberger, eccentric right-hander of the Brooklyn Dodgers, today was fine.

$400 by Manager Leo Duroche and indefinitely suspended without pay. Two fines were slapped on him, each for $200, one for insubordination and the other for staying out of the Dodgers' hotel last night until 3 a. m.

The pitcher had not reported to the ball park here today where other members of the team arrive for the contest with the Reds.

"I don't know how long his suspension without pay will last. I'll talk to Larry McPhail (Dodge president) about that when we return to Brooklyn Friday," Duroch said.

Poffenberger was to be officially informed of his manager's action when Durocher sees him later today.

Poffenberger, found in a hotel lobby, had this to say: "I know I'm stubborn, but I'm not going to let the game."

Gene Cook Wins Top Post at Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 23.—(AP)—Last year's leader, Gene Cook, Anniston professional, tied together in a morning round 71 and an afternoon 74 today to win the top berth in the qualifying trials for the national open from this district and the Alabama open championship.

Otey Crisman, of Selma, and Johnny Morris, of Tuscaloosa, both professionals, won the other two places in the open trials.

Moonlit Terrace of Driving Club Forms Setting of Summer Opening

By Sally Forth.

IN AN entrancing setting of simulated moonlight, more than a thousand members of Atlanta society danced upon the cool, flower-bordered terrace of the Piedmont Driving Club last evening upon the occasion of the club's summer opening. The annual meeting of the club, held at 6:30 o'clock, preceded supper and dancing on the terrace, which will form society's favorite rendezvous through the summer months. The election of officers resulted in the re-election of the popular president, DeSales Harrison, as well as that of Albert Thornton as vice president, and Buster Kilpatrick as secretary. Two new members elected to the board of directors were Murray Shoun and Lawrence Willet, who will serve with the three remaining over for another year, including Hal Hentz, John W. Grant Jr. and James H. Franklin.

Never has the terrace appeared more attractive, with its border of flower-filled boxes in full bloom, interspersed with tall, formal cedars against a background of rose-covered trellises. And never have Atlanta women looked prettier than in their airy summer gowns and flower-laden hats, which formed a colorful contrast to the white linens and flannels of their dancing partners. And to make it all perfect, the mood of the throng matched in galety the informality of the occasion.

Supper was served buffet style from tables placed in the adjoining ballroom and centered with arrangements of brilliantly tinted fruits and vegetables. An interesting feature of the evening was the four portable bars which increased perceptibly the "joie de vivre" of the occasion. And to what occasion, indeed, would they not form an important contribution! Andy Kirk and his colored band played for dancing, and between dances presented a floor show featuring the bands stars, June Redman and Fay Terrell.

DeSales Harrison, president of the club, and Mrs. Harrison were glimpsed dining with a congenial group, the latter smartly attired in a light blue crepe gown printed in fuchsia-colored carnations. Mrs. Martin Kilpatrick, secretary of the club, was stunningly gowned in a deep red velvet, trimmed with the neckline with rhinestone clips, and accented by a jade green ribbon worn in her blond tresses.

Directors of the club and their wives present included Dr. and Mrs. William E. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Maddox Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Hal Hentz and Mr. and Mrs. John W. Grant Jr.

Mrs. Campbell paused at the entrance to the softly lighted terrace, long enough for Sally to admire her gown of voluminous white mousseline, the hemline and jacket of which were bordered with waltz blue satin.

Mrs. Maddox dined and danced, wearing a classic model of brown jersey accented by white polka dots, while Mrs. Hal Hentz presented an attractive figure wearing pastel-flowered organdy.

Mrs. Grant chose for the gala occasion a costume of gossamer gray organdy appliqued with dangle red flowers, and featuring a square neckline and short bouffant sleeves.

Among prominent newlyweds present at last evening's affair were Dr. and Mrs. Stephen Barnett Jr. and Mrs. Jack King. Mrs. Barnett, the former Josephine Meador, was a sought-after bride, wearing a diaphanous model of pink tulle fashioned with a basque and a bouffant skirt. Mrs. King, who was before her recent marriage Mary Lamar McKenzie, of Macon, presented a chic figure wearing a cerise and white printed model of filmy mousseline and tulle.

Joyce Smith and her fiancé, Jack Boykin, were glimpsed as they continued to receive congratulations upon their betrothal from their many friends. Joyce was an admired figure attired in a candy-striped chiffon in pastel shades, featuring a moulded bodice and a pleated skirt.

Dining with a congenial group were Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Allen Jr. and their attractive guest, Harriett Arthur, of Long Island, N. Y. Mrs. Allen selected for the summer opening a graceful gown of

Miss Jennie Champion Becomes Bride of Dr. Nardin at Church Rites

DR. AND MRS. GENE NARDIN.

Staff Photo

Glenn Memorial church formed the setting last evening for the marriage of Miss Jennie Champion and Dr. Gene Nardin, of Anderson, S. C., and Atlanta, which was brilliantly solemnized at 8:30 o'clock before an assemblage of prominent Atlantans.

Dr. W. A. Smart performed the service, and Miss Eula Hancock presented a program of nuptial music.

Flowers were spoken before an altar banked with palms and greenery and beautified with pedestal baskets of Easter lilies and white gladioli. Cathedral candelabra holding white tapers flanked the altar, and family pews were marked with clusters of white tulle.

Groomsmen were Eugene Hauk, Dr. Joe Tidmore and Douglas Dennis, cousin of the bride.

Ushers were Dr. Major F. Fowler, Dr. Cyrus Strickler Sr., Lee Ashcraft and Guy Woolford Sr.

The bride was attended by two maids-of-honor, Misses Frances Woolford and Anne Scott Harman. They were gowned in models of sea-foam green marquisette, the basques of which featured sweetheart necklines and brief puffed sleeves trimmed with ruching of the same material. The bridesmaids wore models of cascade bouquets of Shasta daisies tied with yellow streamers.

Bridesmaids were Mesdames Ross Watson, of Pensacola, Fla.; Jack Jackson, of Greenville, S. C.; Misses Martha Skeen, Julie McClatchey and Edith Harrison. They were gowned in bouffant models of candlelight yellow, fashioned like those worn by the maids-of-honor, and carried cascade bouquets of Shasta daisies tied with green ribbon.

The bride entered with her father, Dr. William Leon Champion, by whom she was given in marriage, and was met at the altar by the groom and his brother, Milton Nardin, who served as best man. She presented a radiant figure in her wedding gown of lustrous ivory satin fashioned in Princess lines, and featuring a shirred bodice, a deep V neckline and leg-o-mutton sleeves. The graceful skirt introduced fullness to form a train several yards in length. Her exquisite Venetian lace veil, loaned by Mrs. Robert Vance, was posed over cream-colored tulle, and fell from a lace coronet embroidered with seed pearls. Orange blossoms fashioned of mother-of-pearl, held the cap to her hair, and she carried a shower bouquet of gardenias and valley lilies.

Mrs. W. L. Champion, mother of the bride, wore stardust blue marquisette trimmed with lace of a matching shade, and a shoulder bouquet of parma violets.

Mrs. Waller H. Nardin, mother of the groom, was gowned in delphinium blue chiffon accented by a shoulder spray of pink roses.

After the ceremony the bride's parents entertained at a reception at Druid Hills Golf Club. Receiving with the hosts were the bride and groom, members of the wedding party and Mrs. Waller H. Nardin.

Two flower-bedecked buffet tables were placed in the ballroom of the club, where Mesdames Paul Berman, Claude Smith, J. C. Malone and Thad Cheshire presided. Misses Marjorie Carmichael and Dorothy Blackshear served punch from a crystal bowl embedded in a mound of Shasta daisies and fern, and Mrs. Clara McConnell kept the bride's book.

Assisting the hosts in entertaining were Mesdames Lee Ashcraft, Guy Woolford and John Dennis.

Dr. Nardin and his bride left for a wedding trip, and upon their return will reside in this city, where they will become popular members of the young married social contingent. For traveling Mrs. Nardin wore a teal blue costume suit with black accessories, and a shoulder spray of gardenias.

Out-of-town guests attending the ceremony and reception were Mrs. W. H. Nardin, the groom's mother; Mr. and Mrs. Milton Nardin and Mrs. M. T. Freeman, grandmother of the groom, all of Anderson, S. C.; Mrs. Neal Vason, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher Vason, Mr. and Mrs. Sue Reid Manley, Mrs. W. H. Adams and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Vason, all of Madison; Mrs. Julian McCurry, of Athens; Mrs. J. A. Champion, of Eaton; and Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Allison, of Birmingham.

Junior High Class Day Will Be Held At N.A.P.S. Friday

The Junior High Class Day of the North Avenue Presbyterian school will be held in the school auditorium Friday at 4:30 o'clock. The eighth grade, dressed in white and wearing clusters of pink roses, will march into the auditorium preceded by the seventh grade in pastel-colored dresses, who will form an aisle for the eighth grade to pass through. Joy Berg, president of Junior High Assembly, will preside. The subject of the class day will be "Lessons Not Learned in Books."

The president, Joy Berg, will welcome the visitors. Miss Thyra Askew, principal, will present attendance awards and the Mrs. J. M. High unselfish service award. Miss Bessie Sharp, class teacher, will present the honor cup to the girl whose grades are the highest.

The class president will ask a list of questions, which will be answered by Misses Virginia Dickson, Frances Martin, Helen Roberts, Gwen Pierson, Marion Hodges, Mary Seabrook and Joyce Oberdorfer.

Piano solos will be played by Misses Mary Truscott and Ann Stevens. Misses Ann Stevens and Virginia Dickson, editor-in-chief and business manager of Snappy News, the Junior High publication, will present a gift to the school for the Greater Naps' fund.

Other features of commencement will include the baccalaureate service at the Druid Hills Baptist church on Sunday at 11 o'clock, with Dr. Louie Newberry preaching. Monday at 5 o'clock Class Day exercises will be held on the campus, and Tuesday evening at 8:15 o'clock at the Woman's Club, 45 seniors will receive diplomas.

New Cooking Methods Preserve Food's Mineral and Vitamin Content

Varied Menus to Delight Your Guests' Palates

By SALLY SAVER

If you're looking for an interesting and different warm day luncheon plate, here it is. What could be more appetizing than a seafood casserole, hot or cold asparagus tips and curried pineapple slices. For all-feminine luncheons you'll like to serve it, and your guests will be delighted with the unusual flavor of curried pineapple. It's no trick at all to make it.

Curried Pineapple.
Heat two tablespoons butter in a frying pan. Stir in two tablespoons of curry powder and two tablespoons of pineapple juice or syrup. Lay six slices of pineapple in this mixture and cook slowly for about 10 minutes, turning the slices often until they are a light brown. Serve at once. These slices are excellent with lamb, chicken or fish.

Shrimp With Mushroom Sauce.
2 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons flour
11-2 cups shrimp, shredded or whole (cooked)
1 can mushroom soup
Melt butter, add flour and blend. Add soup and cook until mixture reaches the consistency of thick white sauce. Stir in the shrimp and continue simmering just long enough for it to be heated through.

Salt and pepper to taste. Serve in patty shells, small individual casseroles, or on toast. Flaked crab meat may be used instead of shrimp.

Shrimp and rice make an excellent combination for a casserole dish. Here is a recipe for a little different shrimp casserole.

Shrimp and Rice En Casserole.
3 tablespoons butter
4 tablespoons flour
2 cups milk
1-3 teaspoon salt
1-4 teaspoon paprika
1-4 teaspoon celery salt
1 teaspoon minced parsley
1-2 cup grated cheese
1 teaspoon minced parsley
1 cup cleaned shrimps (cooked)
1 cup boiled rice
2 tablespoons catsup
1-2 cup crumbs
2 tablespoons butter, melted
Melt the three tablespoons of butter and add the flour. Blend. Add the milk. Cook slowly and stir constantly until a creamy sauce forms. Add all the seasonings, cheese, shrimps, rice and catsup. Mix well and pour into a shallow buttered casserole. Cover with crumbs and melted butter. Bake 20 minutes in moderate oven.

Many Minerals, Vitamins Lost By Cooking

By Ida Jean Kain.

Do you squeeze the family orange juice the night before, add soda to vegetables to keep them green, and drain off the water in which they are cooked? If so, you are following the precedent of many a good housewife, but you are destroying most of the minerals and vitamins.

With the daily discovery of new reasons why we need vitamins and minerals in optimum amounts, it seems to be increasingly important that these elements be saved from loss in cooking or from destruction in any way.

Orange juice that is allowed to stand overnight loses a good part of the vitamin C through oxidation. Tomato juice is similarly affected if left in an open container. Keep it tightly covered.

Except in acids, such as in tomatoes, the addition of soda to vegetables greatly increases the rate of destruction of vitamins. And since the vitamins B, C and G and the minerals calcium and phosphorus dissolve in water, these are lost when the water in which they are cooked is thrown away. Vegetables should be cooked quickly and in as little water as possible. The water that is drained off should be saved for stock in soup and broth.

The old-fashioned method of cooking fruits and vegetables in an open vessel preparatory to canning resulted in the loss of most of the vitamin C, but the new cold pack method and commercial canning process preserve both vitamins and minerals.

You may be astonished to know that when green vegetables are kept for a few days at room temperature they will lose as much as 50 per cent of their vitamin content. They retain their vitamins if kept at or below 30 degrees F.

In marketing, select the young vegetables. The roots and leaves are richer in vitamin C than the older plants. And don't throw away the outer leaves of lettuce and cabbage; these green outer leaves are richest in vitamins. Milk is so easily affected by warmth that if it is left on the doorstep in the sun for only half an hour it loses practically 100 per cent of its vitamin C. Even when kept in a cool place, milk loses from 20 to 30 per cent of the vitamin C content in 24 hours. Milk should be used up while fresh and not left in the ice box.

After going to the trouble to give your family the foods they need—fresh fruits and vegetables, whole milk, butter, cream, cheese, whole grain breads and cereals, and meat, take the further precaution of preventing loss of the vitamins and minerals before they reach the table.

I'm a doctor and I have a vague idea what it is all about. If I were asked I'd select a good doctor and tell him as plainly and accurately as possible what I complained of. I'd carefully avoid suggesting what I might do if I had a name for it. I'd leave it to the doctor to tell me what he finds or believes the trouble might be. In any case I wouldn't care at all whether the doctor thinks I know little or much about symptoms, diagnosis, diet, disease or what-not. If I harbor a fancy that I know as much as the doctor does I'd be a sap to have a doctor at all.

Smart Sports Ensemble—Barbara Bell

Here's an extremely useful vacation design (1755-B) because it includes both play suit and daytime dress. It cuts down on the number of clothes you have to pack up to take away, and cuts down on your expenditure, too. The play suit is tiny-waisted, with a sleeveless top gathered onto a round yoke. The shorts are flaring and beautifully fitted. With the buttoned-around skirt, it becomes a smart little sports frock. Add the bolero, too, and you have a suit that will be charming for street wear. The bolero, by the way, is so nicely tailored that you can wear it with other frocks, too.

Make this of chambray, gingham, pique or calico and trim it with contrasting braid or binding. Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1755-B is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements, 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 14 (32) requires 5-6 yards of 35-inch material; 9-10 yards of braid or binding.

Send for Barbara Bell's spring and summer pattern book! Make your own smart new frocks for street, daytime and afternoon, with these simple, carefully planned designs! It's chic, it's easy, it's economical, to sew your own. Each pattern includes a step-by-step sew chart to guide beginners. Price of pattern book 15 cents. Do not send stamps.

Great days on the plains at roundup time! And great fun for you when you corral your gang, sing the old cowboy ballads. Here's a favorite everyone likes. "When I think of the last great roundup. On the eve of Eternity's dawn—I think of the past of the cowboys Who have been with us here and are gone." Romantic songs, too—you see plenty of them as you leaf over your songbook. Here's a bit from "Cowboy Jack," a tender ditty the cowboys croon in the long twilight—when the dogies are fast asleep: "He was just a lonely cowboy With a heart so brave and true—And he learned to love a maiden With eyes of Heaven's own blue." A tough hombre was the fellow they sing of in "Brother of Missouri Joe." So you and the crowd whoop it up in good western style: "The good state of Texas called its Rangers. They came just like bees from the hive. The Governor sent out a regiment To get him dead or alive." On picnics, dates, when friends drop in, keep the fun at an all-time high with popular cowboy melodies. Our 50-page songbook, "Western Heart Throbs," has 27 favorites—rollicking cowboy ditties, ballads, love songs of the western prairies. Complete with words, music, piano accompaniments, guitar diagrams. Send 15 cents in coins for our

MY DAY Strength of Democracy Is in the Individual

By Eleanor Roosevelt.

WASHINGTON—I don't think I ever had a more interesting group of young people with me than the group which came with Miss Dickerman this past week end. They all seemed to enjoy their sightseeing and to be full of interest in everything. This group of Todhunter school seniors was divided about equally, I should say, between the girls who are going to college and those who are going to take other types of graduate work. I have a feeling that whatever they do, life will hold interest for them. They seem healthy, normal and vigorous young people and it was a great pleasure to have them. Yesterday morning they visited Mount Vernon and Arlington and in the afternoon they went back to New York city.

I had only one or two appointments in the afternoon. One of them was with a lady who was most anxious to establish a hostel for young students who are visiting the New York World Fair. Later it will be of service to all young people who are coming to New York city from distant places.

Today I lunched with a group of young lawyers who work with the Social Security Board and some of the other staff members. I then had the pleasure of hearing a chorus of young people from Dayton, Ohio, called the Dayton, Ohio, Children Singers. Next, I attended the annual meeting of the National Democratic Club in Washington to raise a fund for the liquidation of the mortgage on the clubhouse.

Next autumn, all over this country, I hope we can hold a Democratic women's day and raise funds for work in our own communities and contribute a portion to the work of the women's division of the Democratic national committee and the National Democratic Women's Club. The Republican women have their club in New York city and I think it is useful for both groups if women to do all they can in education through their party organizations. The strength of our democracy lies in the active interest taken by every individual citizen in government. That means that all parties should be constantly re-examining their own policies in the light of modern developments.

I received a most interesting letter a short time ago from Mr. Earl Wilcox, a Chicago lawyer, telling of the development in the work of the blind throughout the country. He makes one point which I think is worth speaking about here. He feels that blind people can be economically independent if only there could be an agency to contact employers to make sure that blind people are placed in positions which they can fill.

If a blind man fails the employer is apt to feel that it is just because he is blind, whereas another blind man might succeed. Perhaps a blind man needs a little more adjustment than the man without this handicap. It means a great deal to us as a nation to see that all those who can lead normal lives and assume their own burdens should do so. I hope that many people take an interest in Mr. Wilcox's ideas.

When, Where to Bid Game Important Bridge Questions

By Harold Sharpsteen.

When to bid to game . . . where to bid to game . . . are two vital questions occurring in nearly every deal of bridge which can only be satisfactorily solved through an accurate exchange of information by the partnership.

It is seldom that one partner is content to go on to game without first knowing pretty well what the other half of the partnership will be able to produce in the way of assistance.

WHEN AND WHERE.
Too infrequently Lady Luck answers the two questions—when and where—with an exceptional holding for one player, as:

S-7 D-K J 10 9
(1) H-A K Q J 6 5 4 C-5
With such a strong hand the when and where questions are both answered for the fortunate holder is willing to go on to game in hearts single-handed, especially if partner previously passed, eliminating a possible slam.

WHEN BUT WHERE?
But suppose he picks up:
(2) H-A K 10 4 C-4
The question "when" is answered, for game should be bid in something . . . but where?

Rogers-Astaire Want to Select Story

By Sheila Graham.

HOLLYWOOD, May 23.—Wayne Morris is asking for a salary raise. His current pay is around $300 a week, which is a mere trifle in Hollywood financial language. . . . Fred Astaire states in Ireland, where he is now visiting, that he and Ginger Rogers will not make another picture together.

"Unless we can find a first class story," . . . Joan Fontaine is refusing all dates until Conrad Nagel returns from New York. He will be here in a week. Are We Inclined To Be Callous With the Aged?

By Caroline Chatfield.

It's always been true that most parents were far more sentimental toward their children than children were toward their parents. Add to this the fact that we are living in an age of realism where sentiment is considered stupid, where the rising generation prides itself on its common sense approach to every problem and the result is a lot less consideration for the dependent old folks than there was in the Victorian age. For argument's sake granting that it's all wrong, it certainly behooves parents to think about the changes that have taken place and make their plans accordingly.

Incidentally, be it said to the glory of the negro race, they accept gracefully the obligation to give homes to their old parents and grandparents and share what they have, however little. All live happily together and none seems to question the right of the old folks to keep their seats, nor the obligation of the young to pay for them. However, young white America is not half so dutiful or so generous toward its old.

Our important periodicals carry articles written by anonymous writers (they haven't so far summoned the nerve to tell their names) advocating all sorts of dispositions to be made of dependent parents: boarding them out in private homes, in boarding houses, in private institutions; anything to obviate the necessity of two generations living together.

One of these writers stated simply that after her papa had bored her husband to death by fighting the Civil War daily at the dinner table, after he had buttonholed all the family friends to give them a taste of battle and introduced them to a real live hero, she decided to put papa where he could have an interested audience of his own age. This she justified on the score that her husband was entitled to peace and privacy in his own house which he wouldn't have with poor old papa wandering around.

Now I say with this sort of literature being dispensed it's the part of kindness to tell parents that the attitude they had to their old folks is different from the attitude their progeny may have toward them, which doesn't mean that there is no such thing as filial gratitude and affection any more but that its expression is changing, as the way of life is changing. Living quarters are usually crowded; everybody is rushing around madly trying to make a living and sandwich in some amusement and there's not the same place for the old folks in this scheme as there was in the time that the men worked and the women sat around the house.

Whereas in the old days sentiment decreed that children had to take dependent parents, aunts and uncles under the roof with them, in the opinion of the moderns, sentiment is out of style and public opinion permits children to dispose of their parents as seems best to them, with special emphasis on what seems best for the new family.

Victorian Era Had Its Good Furniture

By Elizabeth Boykin.

Maybe the entire Victorian period in furniture is too close for us to be impartial about it. The only thing we can be sure about now is that it wasn't all bad, as we thought in the first decades of this century.

But we waited until we'd gotten rid of most of our Victorian and washed our hands of the whole thing before we learned that everything of the period wasn't a monstrosity. In fact some smart decorators discovered all of a sudden that there were some very fine things produced by those much maligned Victorians, and we woke up one fine morning to find that it would cost a pretty penny to get another horsehair sofa like grandma gave to the wash-woman back in 1904.

But what is good Victorian and what is bad? Ah, that's a fine point, and we're not making any blanket statements. However, we will commit ourselves to this point—that generally the so-called bad Victorian is that made after machine turning came in and, you got that jig-saw type of ornament. Before that, hand carving was the order of the day, and hand-carved furniture of the nineteenth century was of fine workmanship. You may or may not think that it is somewhat over-ornamented, but you can't snub it. Much of it was very beautiful. Based essentially on Louis XV forms, it acquired a definite individuality of its own.

The most important cabinet maker of this period was John Beller, who had a shop in New York in the mid-century, where he made $2,500 parlor suites for Manhattan's first families. His best pieces were usually of rosewood, and the upholstered chairs were characterized by solid wood backs. This furniture looks frail but real Beller is practically indestructible because it is made of layers on layers of rosewood veneers put together, then carved. This gives great strength to the furniture.

With this frilly afternoon dress which she wears in "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle," Ginger Rogers would select the perfume of a provocative charm—subtle and alluring.

Flower-Like Perfumes Complement Fashions

By LILLIAN MAE.

This is verily the season of flowers. It is not enough that we have lovely blossoms raising their heads in salute in our gardens and porch boxes. They only encourage Dame Fashion to do her flowerly best with feminine apparels just for you. If you do not live in Atlanta write me, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

And of course the cosmetics and perfumers will not be outdone by any of fashion's whims. They are supplying cool flower fragrances to complement the cool flower-like fashions. Suggested for spraying lingerie, there's a flower mist in any one of several floral fragrances. Doesn't that sound intriguing—flower mist? Well, it is. My favorite is June geranium. But yours might be carnation or one of the several others.

To mention just a few of the lovely perfumes, for which there are also matching colognes, there's one with the true scent of spring—a charming complement to the feminine fashions of the day—fresh, joyous, exciting, gay. You'll love it with the season's gay prints.

Another is an unsurpassed tribute to beauty—the choice of smart women—a perfume of provocative charm, sophisticated, subtle, alluring. It's the orchids and music type. It's just right for the after-noon chignon ensemble.

To complete an outfit of georgette with its white lingerie touches, there is a suggestion of white orchids in all their frailty and loveliness.

If your evening frock is the soft, cyclamen type, then I would suggest a gay, vibrant, delightfully young, exciting perfume—accented by this same perfumer who has worked out all your perfume and cologne combinations for you. Don't just purchase a perfume—even though the bottle is very, very lovely. But use perfume to suit your own personality, to complement the particular outfit you are wearing. And you can't go wrong in flowers this season.

So phone me for further information concerning these delightful scents described today, stating whether you are interested in the

Miss Rachel Eve Neely Becomes Bride of Benjamin M. Parker

Old World Setting Provides Scene for Al Fresco Ceremony

By YOLANDE GWIN.

Old world pageantry—

A brilliant sun creeping out behind rain filled clouds—

Organ music floating on unseen waves to add romance and solemnity to the air—

Amid this setting Miss Rachel Eve Neely, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Neely, became the bride of Benjamin M. Parker, of Washington, D. C., yesterday afternoon at the Neely farm, the country home of the bride's parents in Gwinnett county.

Rain clouds, which overflowed 15 minutes before the 5 o'clock wedding hour, no doubt, sensed the importance of the occasion, and disappeared in favor of blue skies casting brilliant rays of sun on all sides to add their part to the al fresco nuptial tableau.

On the tree-bordered fruit terrace, or, as the French would call it, "lapis vert," meaning green carpet, the rites were performed by Rabbi David Marx. The elevated terrace, which offers restful solitude on the south wing of the handsome farm house, lent itself admirably with its natural and ornamental decorations, as the setting for the wedding tableau and for the assembling of several hundred guests who gathered before the outdoor altar for the al fresco occasion.

On flower-bordered paths leading from the driveways to the fruit terrace were glimpsed Malcolm Bryan, Norman Elsas, Arthur J. Harris, Edgar Neely Sr., John K. Ottley, Sr., Dr. James E. Paullin, Walter Rich and Henry Toombs who in the role of ushers escorted feminine guests to the garden.

Al Fresco Setting. The formality of the occasion, tempered by the informality of the outdoor setting, gave early arrivals opportunity for brief and enjoyable chatter. Formality and conversation, however, were forgotten, as driving gusts of rain drove guests indoors for a scant 15 minutes.

The rain stopped promptly at 5 o'clock and from somewhere amid the outlining border of fruit trees George L. Hammond, at the organ, began the wedding march to herald the arrival of the bridal party.

An aisle formed by ropes of daisies, caught at intervals with small cupids made of rich greenery and poised on one small foot, extended the entire length of the fruit terrace. A raised platform serving as the altar had only nature's colorful background of distant hills which met the heavens on the horizon, to complete a setting of natural beauty.

Gowns as fresh as the grass carpeted terrace, but as airy as the latest melody were worn by Miss Charlotte Marie Fowler, of New York, a classmate of the bride at Smith College, and Miss Gertrude Parker, of New York, a sister of the groom, who were bridesmaids, and by Mrs. Robert Sams, the matron of honor.

The gowns were fashioned semi-formal and featured close-fitting basques of apple green taffeta from which flowed long full white tulle skirts posed over crisp white taffeta. An old-fashioned note was introduced by their short white mitts and their small parasols made of maiden hair fern with the top center of daisies which each attendant carried at a jaunty angle over her right shoulder.

The former Miss Neely appeared in her bridal robes from the south wing of the home and ascended the outdoor aisle with her father, Frank Neely, who gave her in marriage. Upon their arrival at the altar they were met by Mr. Parker and Paul Freund, of Washington, D. C., who was best man. Rabbi Marx, the officiating clergyman, told the bridal couple of performing the ceremony that united the bride's parents. The bride took her vows wearing a misty white tulle model with simplicity as the keynote. The dress worn over a rustling white taffeta featured a fitted bodice with a square neck and short puffed sleeves. The full skirt was formed of the billowy tulle and fell from a fitted waistline and extended into a long built-in train. Her short face veil was untrimmed, and her crescent shaped bouquet was of Eucharist lilies, chincherechee and other small flowers.

Motion Pictures Made.

Intimates of the bride couple made moving pictures of the ceremony, and as they left the altar and walked down the aisle, they paused at the entrance to receive felicitations from the guests. They were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Neely and Mrs. Loomis, of New York, the bride's mother, and Mrs. Harry Schlesinger, the bride's maternal grandmother, and members of the wedding party to receive at the reception which followed.

Mrs. Neely was handsomely gowned in aquamarine marquisette, made with a simple bodice and finished with a long, full skirt, trimmed with narrow ruchings of black lace and velvet ribbons. Mrs. Parker also presented a handsome figure in her model of dusty rose mousseline de soie, trimmed in lace. Her hat was of the same shade, adorned with a fuchsia veil and worn with fuchsia accessories.

As the bride and groom and members of the family received in the al fresco setting just as the sun was sinking behind distant clouds, the guests mingled in congenial groups as refreshments were served. On either side of the south entrance under gay green and white-striped canvas canopies, punch was served. Assisting in entertaining were Mesdames Joseph Asher, W. Colquitt Carter, Herbert Elsas, William Fulghum, Albert Howell Jr., Louis Montag, Bruce Montgomery, Edgar Neely Jr., Henry Ogden, John K. Ottley Jr., Harold Patterson, Richard Rich and Oscar Strauss Jr.

Inside the farm house a rural motif was featured at one end of the living room by the large arrangement of wheat and oats, while at the other end were boughs of mountain laurel. Over the massive mantle were enormous branches of peach trees with the tiny green fruit adding to its realistic appearance, while a larger cluster of pears added a similar touch. Garden flowers in varied hues graced tables throughout the room.

Tiered Wedding Cake. A tiered wedding cake embossed in small green flowers held traditional wedding symbols. White satin ribbon streamers extending from the confection were tied with white roses and formed a border around the base of the cake.

During the early evening the bride and groom, the wedding party and a few members of the family gathered for the bride to cut the first piece of the cake. A smaller cake bearing a sugar-coated label in green and white bore the names "Rachel and Benjamin."

Guests lingered for more unhurried chatting with the bride and groom, the brief salutations in the receiving lines being hardly sufficient to extend wishes for happiness to the bride and congratulations to the groom. Many guests also remained on the broad terrace where the cool summer air was sweetened by the perfume of the flowers slumbering in their outdoor beds.

The bride, relieved of her fragrant bouquet, appeared as a character depicted in a fairy book, as she mingled with the guests in informal conversation. Many found an opportunity of admiring her handsome wide gold wedding ring of unusual design. The groom met new friends and renewed former acquaintances as he followed his bride.

Bermuda was chosen for their honeymoon trip, and in packing her trousseau luggage, a chic suit of a becoming shade of blue was omitted for the bride to don for traveling. A cluster of white orchids adorned her ensemble. There has been no time limit set for the newlyweds' return, but within a few weeks they will travel to the States and go to Washington to live, where the groom is a prominent lawyer.

Invitation List.

The invitation list to yesterday's wedding included many prominent Atlantans, as well as distinguished figures from distant parts. In the latter group were Miss Selma Jones, of Boston, Mass.; Miss Charlotte Marie Fowler, of New York; Dorothy Tibbets, of Washington, D. C.; Paul Freund, of Washington, D. C.; Alexander Holtzoff, Frank Murphy, Arnold Raum, Harold Leventhal, William J. O'Connor, and Arthur Breuer, all of Washington, D. C.; Miss Eleanor LeMaire, of New York; Dr. and Mrs. Michael Hoke, of Beaufort, S. C.; Mrs. Julia Peterkin, of Mrs. Brooks Stuckey, of Fort Motte, S. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Toombs, of Warm Springs. Mr. Toombs, it is recalled, designed the Neely farm house.

The groom's family attending, in addition to his mother, Mrs. Lott Parker, of New York, were his sisters, Misses Sarah, Gertrude and Pearl Parker; his brother, George, and another brother, Joel Parker, and the latter's wife. Others from the east attending were Miss Mary Sachs, of Harrisburg, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Tom White, of Island, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. James Young, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Young and Misses Annie, Ida and Mary Young and Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald Hall, of Nashville, Tenn., and Mr. and Mrs. Ramon Weil, of Montgomery.

Mrs. Barton Fetes Miss Lucile Allen.

Miss Lucile Allen, whose marriage will be an event of Friday, was honored recently at a linen shower at which Mrs. V. L. Barton was hostess at her home in West End.

Indian Creek Club.

Indian Creek Civic Club met recently with Mr. and Mrs. E. P. McElroy at their home on Lenox road. Mrs. Charles Thrash, vice president, presided.

The next meeting of the club will be in the nature of a steak fry at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thrash at 3141 Lenox road, on June 15 at 5:30 o'clock. Members are requested to be present.

Woodmen Circle 86.

Maple Grove No. 86, Supreme Forest Woodmen Circle, will celebrate its 23rd birthday tomorrow evening, the services will be held in the club rooms at 160 Central avenue at 8 o'clock.

North Georgia district officers met recently with members to complete plans for the district convention at Toccoa to be held on May 27.

The former Miss Rachel Neely is shown with her father, Frank Neely, as she ascended the aisle leading from the Neely farmhouse to the garden where yesterday afternoon she became the bride of Benjamin M. Parker, of Washington, D. C. The service was attended by several hundred Atlantans and out-of-town guests and was followed by a reception at which Mr. and Mrs. Neely were hosts, and at which they were assisted in receiving by the bride's father and their attendants, and by the groom's mother, Mrs. Lott Parker, of New York, and by the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Harry Schlesinger.

Ben Hill Garden Club Celebrates 2d Anniversary

Miss Wilkie Feted At Prenuptial Parties

Miss Calvinia Wilkie, popular bride-elect of next month, continues to be feted at a number of social affairs prior to her marriage to Leland Phillips. On Saturday Miss Mildred McMullen gives a bridge party and a linen shower at her home on Ponce de Leon avenue for Miss Wilkie.

On June 3 Mrs. T. L. Lane gives a luncheon for the bride-elect, and in the afternoon Mrs. James Fluker entertains at a bridge-tee at her home on Roanoke avenue. Mrs. Marvin Woodall has planned a bridge party on June 6 to honor Miss Wilkie, to be given at her home on Lanier boulevard.

Miss Wilkie will be honored on June 10 at the luncheon to be given at the Marietta Country Club on June 14. The bride-elect will be central figure at the bridge-supper to be given by Miss Reta Randall at her home on Pace's Ferry road.

Miss Cora Gantt Is Honor Guest.

Mrs. Calvin Stewart was hostess yesterday at her home on Peachtree street at a bridge party complimenting Miss Cora Gantt, whose marriage to Rosser Little will be solemnized June 3.

The guests included Misses Sarah Smith, Sally Jenkins, Dorothy Bagwell, Catherine Calhoun, Laura Hill, Beverly Bailey, Mesdames Adrian Ford, Harry N. Dupre Jr., of Marietta; George W. Gantt, mother of the bride-elect; Rufus Carswell, Jack King, Russell Bridges, Alfred Kennedy Jr., T. D. Meador Jr., Charles Conn, David N. McCullough, Bartow Duncan, Randolph Hearst and Raymond Cay Nelson.

Another party honoring Miss Gantt is the luncheon to be given by Mrs. Raymond Cay Nelson, on May 31, at the Biltmore hotel, which will assemble the bridesmaids in the Gantt-Little wedding party.

Mrs. Thomas Eve Fetes Miss L'Engle.

Among the first of a series of parties planned for Miss Elizabeth L'Engle, whose marriage to Arthur Tufts Jr. will be an event of summer, was the bridge-tee at which Mrs. Thomas Eve entertained yesterday at her home on Sixteenth street.

Mrs. Victor Allen, of Buford, assisted her daughter in entertaining. Guests included Misses Alice Davis, Nelle Freeman, Sylvia Pringle, Ann Walker, Margaret L'Engle, Mrs. Henry L. Taylor Jr., and Mrs. Olin Crabbe.

Mimosa Club Exhibits Flower Arrangements.

The Mimosa Garden Club met recently at 755 Peachtree street with Mrs. Clarence Haverly as hostess.

The club members exhibited flower arrangements designed to show suitability for varied occasions. These included an arrangement of Gloriosa lilies from a member's Sea Island garden for a formal dinner; a white bridal table; an informal luncheon table with orange poppies and blue corn flowers; one table with tulips done in the Japanese manner; and other with pink roses against pale blue appointments. They also showed cheerful small flower arrangements for bed and invalid trays; handsome foliage in formal manner for console or hall tables; roses and larkspur combined for mantel and occasional table placings; an arrangement of small flowers in the French tradition for a French dressing table; graceful arrangements of lilies and trailing foliage for wall brackets; even an amusing low circular arrangement of many colors and varieties for a cocktail bar setting.

Representatives of other garden clubs were invited to see the display, which constituted the club's annual flower show. This eliminated competitive judging, but sought to show range of blossoms and design.

The hostess, Mrs. Haverly, served a delightful tea to her guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin M. Parker are shown immediately after their marriage yesterday afternoon which was solemnized at the Neely farm, home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Neely, in Gwinnett county.

The bride is the former Miss Rachel Neely, member of prominent and influential Atlanta families. Mr. and Mrs. Parker will spend their honeymoon in Bermuda and will go later to Washington, D. C., to make their residence.

After a brief explanation of the courses offered for graduation L. D. Scott will deliver the diplomas. The public is invited.

Ben Hill Garden Club Celebrates 2d Anniversary

Mrs. Chester Martin was guest speaker at the recent meeting celebrating the second anniversary of the Ben Hill Garden Club at the clubhouse.

Mrs. W. O. Suttles, chairman, presented an interesting program with Miss Eunice Baker speaking on "Chrysanthemums," and Mrs. J. M. Wallace on "Dahlias." Mrs. Marcus Cash gave the history of these flowers.

The club voted to redecorate the clubhouse before the June meeting.

Mrs. Martin judged the flower arrangements, and Miss Eunice Baker won the blue ribbon. Other awards were won by Mrs. C. P. Suber, Mrs. E. VanNorden and Mrs. Marcus Cash. The attendance prize was won by Mrs. W. B. Fitzgerald, and the contest prize by Mrs. Gordon Shurbutt.

Co-hostesses were Mrs. C. P. Suber and Mrs. L. G. Fulton.

The slogan of the Ben Hill Garden Club is "To Make the Garden Beautiful." Under the leadership of Mrs. C. P. Suber, president, the roadsides on Campbellton road have been planted with dogwood and crepe myrtle. The club plans to add iris to help beautify the roadsides.

The 25 members are enthusiastic gardeners, which was proven by the successful flower show held recently at the club's pretty brick clubhouse. About 150 entries of iris, peonias, roses and artistic arrangements were judged by Mrs. Chester Martin and Mrs. James T. McGee. The sweepstakes prize was won by Mrs. Eugene Heath on a specimen iris, Frieda Mohr.

New Members Elected To D. A. R. Board.

New members elected to the board of management of the Atlanta Chapter, D. A. R., are Mesdames Thomas C. Mell, Frances Brown Chase, Eli Thomas, C. V. LeCraw, Charles M. Loye, Hughes Roberts, Harry Indell and J. F. Sellers, Jr. The report was submitted by the nominating committee, composed of Mesdames Lucius McConnell, chairman, James Loggans, A. G. DeLoach, Forrest M. Barfield and Miss Hazel Kirk. Members were elected at the meeting, held recently at Craigie House on Piedmont avenue.

Mrs. Owen McConnell, regent, read a report from the Continental Congress was served by Miss D. C. Read. A. G. DeLoach outlined the social side of the congress; Mrs. H. H. McCall gave an interesting resume of the meeting, reporting particularly on the resolutions. Mrs. Reuben Garland, who was elected national recording secretary of the junior national assembly, reported on the national junior group activities. Mrs. Hayden Shover reported on the filing and lending committee.

A new member introduced was Mrs. R. E. Bell. Mrs. Lyman Calver, a visitor from Florida, and Mrs. Archibald Galloway were also introduced. Mrs. Patricia Makinson sang several numbers, accompanied by Miss Thurman. The year closed with 28 new members and seven to join by transfer. Tea was served by Miss Lucile Fort Williams, Mrs. J. F. Sellers Jr., and Mrs. John Hancock after the meeting.

Clarkston Club.

Garden division of Clarkston Woman's Club met recently at the club house. Mrs. A. B. Millam presided. Mrs. Tom Jolly and Mrs. Millam gave reports on their trip to the state garden club meeting held at Sea Island.

Hostesses for the occasion were Mesdames T. F. Kent and W. Albert Peavy.

SWEET FOR A SEASON

Gern Tells Stirling His Uncle Is Scudder Jones, Plane Manufacturer

By JOSEPH McCORD.

INSTALLMENT XXXII.

"How do you do, Mr. Jones?" was the cordial announcement of his presence. "It looks as though you were engaged in putting your house in order."

"Hello," Gern returned briefly. "I guess that expresses it. Sit down, won't you? If you can find a chair."

"Just dropped in for a minute," Stirling explained, accepting the invitation. "I feel that I owe you something of an apology for not having called sooner. Of course, I had learned that you were not seriously injured and was sincerely glad for you. At the same time..."

"It wasn't necessary," was the somewhat ungracious reply. "I got off easy. Too easy, considering what happened to Miss Lee."

"Yes, she had a narrow escape. But I believe she is well on her way to complete recovery. I saw her this forenoon. She was sitting up in bed and looking quite herself."

"The elaborate carelessness in Gern's voice was oddly at variance with the wistfulness that showed for an instant in his brown eyes. It was concealed at once, but not before Stirling had seen and wondered."

"I understand," he said cheerfully, by way of changing the subject. "That you and my friends the Peterses are looking after the place for the present." He worded that information in a fashion that would not reveal that he knew of the farm's sale.

"Mister and Mrs. Peters are. I was," Gern placed a definite emphasis on the last word.

"I see. You mean you are leaving. I suppose that explains..." Stirling finished with a wave of his hand that included the general disorder.

"That's right. When Miss Lee sold the farm, she agreed to stay until the new owner could find some one to take charge. He's been stalling all along and I'm getting out."

"I am sorry."

"I'm not. I wish I'd have gone sooner. Miss Lee might have been all right, now." As he stared out the window, there was such a despondent expression on his face that Stirling was moved to experiment.

"I know that Miss Glada is sorry to see you go away. She has spoken about you often. How efficient you were and the help you had been to her."

"That wasn't today," Gern guessed grimly.

"No. You're right. But see here, old man, you're brooding too deeply about that accident being entirely your fault. Those things happen every day and to the best drivers. I have heard no intimations..."

"That's because you haven't been talking to the right people," Gern interrupted bitterly. "I was absolutely to blame for that smash. If you knew..." His voice trailed away as he continued to stare at the sunny landscape beyond the window.

"And, of course, I don't know, Jones. I am sorry. But you might have had so much more to reproach yourself with. I would try to forget it."

"That's a good one, too," Gern sat silent and motionless while Stirling watched him, scrutinizing the younger man's face shrewdly. Suddenly the latter turned, leaned forward, resting his folded arms on the desk top. There was a determined look on his lean face. "I'm going to tell you something, Mr. Stirling," he stated crisply. "And for exactly two reasons."

"If it will help, I will be glad to hear them," was the quiet response.

"I have my own reasons," Gern began, seeming to choose his words carefully, "for believing that you... that you are a very good friend of Miss Lee."

"I hope I am."

"I'm leaving. But there is something I want her to know. Not now. But some day. It won't make much difference then, but it might give her a pleasant memory of me. I'd like to think it would. I've taken a pretty low advantage of her kindness to me, especially when she took me in here more or less as an act of charity."

"Stirling smiled slightly. 'I don't believe that Miss Lee ever accepted you as the common garden variety of hobo. You don't fit into that role as well as you think. But what was your other reason?'"

"That you seem pretty... regular."

"And I like that even better than the first. You can trust me."

"One thing I want to make clear at the start, then. I haven't been two-timing around here under false colors. My name of Gern Jones, nothing less and not much more. I don't lie about myself any more than I had to. If I wanted my story to stick, I just didn't go into any details and Glada never held out for any. That's just another reason why I feel like a heel, now."

"I see," Stirling was quick to note the lapse from the formal "Miss Lee."

"I could tell that she was pretty much puzzled about me and my past and I don't wonder, from several things that happened."

"Excuse me," Stirling interrupted thoughtfully, "if I seem to satisfy my curiosity on one point before you go any further. Does Mr. Lee know something of your history?"

"Yes. And that makes you wonder why I should be telling you, if he could explain it all to Glada."

"Perhaps."

"Well," Gern smiled slightly for the first time, "I'm afraid I've got the little fellow in a tough spot. He's been in on the plot from the first, although he doesn't know many of the sordid details of my past life. Just took me on faith. As a matter of fact, he started this. But he's under oath to say nothing to Glada, see? Even if I released him, which I won't. I can see that it would be a little difficult for him to explain. No, I still think it would be better if she gets it from somebody else. He's been pretty swell about everything."

"Just as you like, then."

"I can't pull anything about my coming from a poor but honest family. My father is Judge Horace Jones, of the Supreme Bench, this state. I suppose he's as honest as any lawyer who ever specialized in corporation practice... got away with it, at any rate. I don't reckon you ever heard of him, but the old man and Mr. Lee are pretty close friends. That's what started all this."

"I see."

"And I guess, which is rather more to the point that you never heard of a party by name of Scudder T. Jones?"

"The name isn't familiar."

"It wouldn't be. He's practically the whole Columbia Aircraft Corporation, over at Columbia City. He doesn't advertise himself a whole lot. Anyway, he's my paternal uncle. I was named for him."

"Scudder T. Jones?"

"I drew the Scudder, along with another impossible moniker. When I was in the university, the fellows shortened it to Scud. It sort of stuck with me after that."

"Wait a minute," Stirling interrupted. "Scud Jones. Scud Jones," he repeated aloud, knitting his brows. "You know that sounds familiar for some reason. I can't quite get it. But I've heard that name somewhere, or seen it in print. Or haven't I?"

"It depends on what kind of reading you go in for. You might have seen it in your newspaper."

"Go on with your story," Lynn Stirling directed. "I think it will come to me in a minute."

"Okay," Gern agreed. "With a plane factory in the family, so to speak, you can figure that the law had no appeal for me. I learned to fly sooner than I had any business to, probably. And when I got out of school I had a job at the factory doing whatever suited me, but I was supposed to be some sort of test pilot. I can't divulge any state secrets, but a lot of Uncle Scudder's crates managed to find their way over to Spain."

"And so did you," Stirling supplied. "I'm beginning to connect."

"Yes. I made myself believe that I was all heated up over the cause of the Spanish Loyalist. Though I'd have fought on the other side, I guess, just so I got into the scrap. I got in, all right. It was simpler than getting out. But I got out right when my time came."

"Scud Jones, American flyer," Stirling supplemented. "You were shot down and reported missing. If I remember correctly, that was about the time the Loyalists started their drive in Teruel. I followed events there rather closely, because I know that part of the country well."

"Yeah? So do I. That's where I cracked up. Ran into four enemy planes, I thought I was going to get clear, but one of them finally got on my tail and gave me a burst that fixed me and the ship. I have a hazy recollection of trying to level off. The next thing I knew was that I hadn't checked out, but that I'd been trying to for a long time."

"Your escape was little less than miraculous. You are a fortunate young man."

"I'd have said so, once," Gern offered moodily. "Especially when my right leg decided to stay with me. I've a Paris surgeon to thank for that; it doesn't bother my walking, if I take it easy. But something seemed to have cracked in my brain. Talk about jitters! There was a while that I couldn't look up into the sky without gibbering like an idiot. If a bird flew past the window, it made me sick at the stomach. Sounds silly."

"Not at all," Stirling sympathized. "Shock."

TARZAN AND THE FIRES OF TOHR No. 75

Tarzan descended and announced his discovery. "There's a ledge up there, and a tunnel in the back wall. I think it's a way out. At least it's worth trying." "But how can we get up there?" Major Burton asked. "I'll carry you," the ape-man answered confidently.

One of them Tarzan bore his astonished companions up the side of the wall and deposited them on the ledge. They entered an ample tunnel, winding about through the interior of the earth, and emerged into a vast chamber, which was the junction of many corridors.
